This rule itself is not obligatory It does not enact that any persons must join as parties It does not even say that all persons who may be interested in the result of an action must necessarily be parties, (1) or that all persons must join as plaintiffs when they have the same cause of action against the defen dant (2) Nor is it lind down anywhere else in the Code as to who must be joined as plaintiffs as distinct from these who may be so joined, and though some idea may be formed from the provisious of rule 10, yet they cannot furnish any general rule, as the first clause of the rule is restricted to the case of a bona fide mistake, and the discretion of the Court under the second clause is regulated by considerations different from those which must regulate the action of the plaintiffs themselves The exact character of the right is immaterial (3) there being no distinction between legal and equitable rights, so far as relief in a particular Court is concerned

R 1 was introduced to prevent a misearriage of justice from want of parties and to enable persons aggreeved by the same act, or having the same right to relief, to join in one suit instead of bringing separate suits (4) The former section was not exhaustive in words, and did not say that only persons referred to in it might be joined as parties. The contrary might, no doubt, have been contended for, on the authority of the maxim, expressio unius personæ est exclusio alterius. On the other hand, it was held that there were clearly cases not falling within sects 26 and 28 of the former Code in which plaintiffs and defendants were and must be allowed to tom in a suit. Thus persons having a successive interest were allowed to join as plaintiffs, (5) and in the case cited, in a suit by a daughter to set aside her mother's alienation of the property she held as a widow, the daughter's son was allowed to join as a co plaintiff, though he could not acquire the property in his mother's lifetime And in some cases, persons were allowed to join merely ex abundants cautela. Thus a receiver of an insolvent's estate may, after the insolvent's death, sue for everything due to his estate, but for greater security his executrix may be joined as a plaintiff (6) It is somewhat on a similar principle that, as a general rule, unless the policy of insurance has been legally assigned, and the assignment recognized by the insurance company or unless there has been an equitable assignment, and it can be shown that the holder of the policy has given value for it, the company is entitled to insist upon the legal representative of the assured being made a party to the suit for the amount due under the policy (7) Where however, there was mis joinder of plaintiffs and causes of action it was held that there was nothing to necessitate the dismissal of the suit, but that the party should be put to election and the plaint amended (8) its extreme brockers specially with reference to the decision in Both r Briscoe (4) in which right persons were allowed to join in an action of libel, though to joint injury was slown. The section was held not to authorize the join let of several plaintake in respect of separate estaces of action (5) Under the last Code the exact effect of this rule, as depending on the identity of the "crue of action," had in the onl to depend on the sense in which that expression was understood as wed in this section. It is in its I midest senso taken to denote the con littone of the maintenance of an action, which generally consists of a right and its liteach. Thus ever cause of action presuppo es the existence of a right, but it may be observed that an actual breach is not always necessary to constitute a cause of action. In some cases even an actual dental or refusal of the right is not necessary, and a suit may be brought sumply on the basis of a right. Thus may person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a sun not only against any susponder was not allowed to pressurers one interested in denving his longment of the Court, and "The cause of acties considerable to both Miz pir ittack on their residence, the time when the injury complyined of was ne amitted, is one and the same, and the parties who committed the injury are il'so the same in both cases No Court is ousted of its prisdiction by the form of this action, and the irregularity, if any there be does not inpure the refendants, but is in their favour, masmuch as they have to defend one stead of two actions, and justice can be done in the form in which the suit has been brought. test of the application of the corresponding early rule of the English Supreme Court The rule enacted in that section was narrower or broader according as the cause of action was understood in the broad or restricted sense above mentioned (1) Thus in the case (2) to which reference has already heen made, Innes, J. observed that if some such words as "in respect to a particular subject matter" stood in place of "in respect of the same cause of action," the suit might not have been had for misjoinder, but that "looking to the language of sect 26, and that of the latter part of sect 54 (of the former Code), as they jointly stand, it appears to us that the Code does not authorize the joining of plaintiffs in a suit in respect of distinct causes of action, in which they are not interested, and their interests are not merely conflicting but antagonistic " On the other hand, Tyrrell, J , in pointing out (3) the distinction between the cruso of action and the subject matter, observed that "the plaintiffs had distinct and separate subject matters of action, to wit, their separate shares in the estate possessed for her life by the widow in alienating the property to N , to the jeopardy of the future rights of the plaintiffs as her reversionary successors to two thirds of the estate," and that "the plaintiffs therefore, though unconnected and separate in respect to the subject matters of the suit, were conveniently and rightly joined in vindicating the one interest common to them all, centreing in the main issue in the case, which was simply the nature and extent of the widow's dominen over the estate she admittedly pessessed"

Persons -See notes, p 513, ante In the under-mentioned case,(1) it was held that the rules by which the Poora Cantonment Committee was created did by implication, though not by express words, create the committee a corpora tion for the purposes of the conservancy of the cantonment It could therefore sue, and bs sued, in its own name, on contracts entered into in its corporate character

"May be joined."—It was held that the provisions (2) of sect 28 also, like those of sect 26 of the last Code, were neither imperative (3) and obligatory, nor exhaustive The third rule is in the same terms as sect 28 of the Code of 1882, except as to the omission (which is of importance) of the words " in respect of the same matter," and the introduction of words which bring it into conformity with r 1 Additional power to make certain persons defen dants is given expressly by r 6 and there are several other cases in which persons may, and in fact must, be joined as co defendants, though "ony right to relief" is not alleged and cannot be alleged, to exist against them Reference may be made to the case of co sharers and others who ought to join as co plaintiffs and in their refusal to join as such, must be joined as co defendants There are, besides, persons against whom no right to relief exists, or 15 alleged to exist, and against whom no relief is or can be claimed, but who must be joined as co defendants for an effective and final determina tion of the suit or "uhose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit," and whom the Court may on that account, implead under r 10, and therefore it must be permissible for the plaintiff to implead as defendants in a suit. whether the contract is of such a nature as in be hinding on him" A leading instance of this necessity of minder is found in the case of suits on mortgages, in which, on the grounds of equity and good conscience, it has long heen considered a general rule in England as well as in India, that all the persons having an interest in the mortgaged property must be impleaded as parties (1) Unlike the right of joint contractees, when two mr more persons make a joint promise, the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one of such joint primisors to perform the whole of the promise (2) And in suits on joint torts the tortfeasors may be saed jointly or separately at the option of the plaintiff, as their responsibility has been held to ho not only joint, but several also (3) The distinction between this rule and r 10 is this the former refers to the action of a plaintiff at the time of presentation of the plaint in joining in the same suit as defendants, parties against whom the right to any rehef is alleged to exist, while the latter refers to the action of the Court at a stage subsequent to the presentation of the plaint in adding a party either as plaintift or defendant, whose presence in the opinion of the Court is neces sary (4)

The Code does not contain any express provision as to who should he considered necessary parties and what would he the effect of the omission of a plaintiff to hring on the record all necessary parties R 13, however hy implication shows that an objection for want of parties is a valid objection to a sut or proceeding, and this section and r 10 hy implication show whn are to he deemed necessary parties. Reading this and r 10 together it has been held that in order that a party may be considered a necessary party defendant, two conditions must be satisfied—first that there must be a right to some relied against him in respect of the matter involved in the suit, and second, that his presence should be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit (5)

In a recent case in the Allahahad High Court where mortgagees suing for recovery of the whole of the mortgage money by sale of the mortgaged property, ountted by an oversight to implied persons who owned a share in the property distinct from the shares owned by the other defendants it was held that only so much of the claim should be decreed as related to the latter shares (6)

It is necessary, however to coneur in the language of Judge Story in which he states the impossibility of laying down any rules which shall be of universal application in the joinder of parties in equity observing that "whether the counton formulary be adopted that all persons materially interested in the suit, or in the subject of the suit, ought to be made parties, or that all persons materially interested in the object of the suit ought to be made parties, we express but a general truth in the application of the doctrine which is useful and valuable, indeed, as a practical guide, but is still open to exceptious and qualifications and limitations, the nature and extent and application of which are not, and cannot independently of judicial decision be always clearly defined "(1)

In a suit for declaration of right against a proprietor of an estate it is necessary that the proprietor himself be made a party to the suit, not his kaindah only. A decree against the latter does not bind the former. The kaindah may, of course, be retained as a party if it is intended to make a personal claim against him (2). As regards benamidar plaintiffs, see aide. A plaintiff is entitled to a decree against a benamidar defendant who has covenanted with him for the quiet enjoyment of property (3). In a suit for reit, defendant pleaded non liability on the ground that he was a benamidar and that the jote belonged to A. It was held that the Court was not competent to introduce A into the suit, against whom no rehef had been sought by the plaintiff (4). Darputnidar and Seputnidar are proper, though not necessary, parties (5). In a suit for pre emption the vender is not a necessary party (6).

"Any right to relief."—It is not necessary that the relief to which the right is alleged to exist should be the same (7) Whicher there is a right to relief in any case depends on the principles of the substantive law applicable, and reference is made to a few typical cases in the text book cited (8) In the under mentioned case, (9) the absent decree holders were held not to be merely parties against whom the auction purchaser defendants were entitled to claim some indemnity, but persons against whom a right to relief existed in the plaintiff if the suit was well founded primarily to eases like those of principal debtor and surety in which both are hable, but the creditor may, at his option enforce his right against either, though not against both. They are not restricted, however to the e eases, and find application also where the plaintiff has no option and the hability depends on the facts as they may be found (1) Thus, in suits on contracts entered into by an agent and repudiated by the principal, both the principal and the agent may be joined as defendants with a climi for relicf against them in the alternative (2) Where the claim was to have a molurrars patta enforced as against the co sharer granting it and the other co sharers who repudiated it, and in the alternative to have the salams paid for the patta returned, it was held that the suit was in substance to enforce n contract to place the plain tiff in pos ession of the land under the patts and to declare his rights to it as against all the defendants, and to ask for compen ation as against the defendant granting it and that such alternative claums might be allowed against one or more of the defendants (3) In n suit by a purchaser of land for arrears of rent against the tenant and the vendor, to whom the tenant alleged having paid the same, the two defendants were held to be properly joined. and a decree against the vendor was sustained on appeal (4) The plaintuit in a suit to recover money from certain persons alleged to have borrowed money from his agent, is entitled, when the olleged debtors deny the loan to make his agent a co defendant and pray for a decree in the alternative against such agent (5)

Omission of the words "in respect of the same matter '-It was a subject of doubt under the Code of 1882 whether the use of the two expressions 'cause of action" and ' same matter" in sects 26 and 28 respectively of that Code, was intended to convey any distinction. As already pointed out, r 1 now omits all reference to cause of action. The subject will be found further discussed in the notes to O II r 3 dealing with the question whether that rule is a provise to this. Whether the terms be synonymous or the latter more comprehensive than the former it was held that if there were but one cause of action the jounder of defendants was justified (6) On the other hand where there were separate causes of action against separate sets of defendants it was held that the trial could not proceed (7) The difficulty arose in cases where, though there may be strictly different causes of action the joinder was sought to be justified on the ground that there was yet 'the same matter' as to which see O II r 3, post This raised the question whether assuming that the latter term was more comprehensive than "cause of action seet 28 of the last Code (corresponding with rule 3 of this order) was not controlled by the section corresponding with O II r 3 post. In the under mentioned suit (1) the matter was held not to be the same, the matter in the one case being an alleged breach of contract by an agent of the firm, and in the other being the right of one partner in the firm as against the other partner to have accounts taken and the partnership wound up Where a number of persons join fraudulently in combination do some act which leads to plaintiff's ouster from the full eujoyment of his proprietary right, they may all be joined in one suit (5) So, also in a suit for damages for assault against several persons, they may all be joined together, if it was simultaneously "made by parties proceeding together and acting in conjunction as to time, place, and assault," as the assault is in such a case only a single act (6) Where a suit was against two defendants uniting two causes of action, one of which was stated to have arisen out of a joint account of the defendants, and the other out of a transaction in which defendant No 1 alone was concerned, it was held that the right to rehef against the defendants quoad the second branch of the claim could not he said to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, in respect of the same matter, so as to justify the joinder in the one suit under the former section (7) A suit (8) against one defendant was for specific performance of a contract to sell land and as against another for a declaration that he was not entitled to any charge upon that land, and Sargent, CJ, held that the relief claimed against the two defendants could not be said to he in respect of the same matter, the right to relief against one defendant hemg in respect of the non fulfilment of the contract, and that against the other defendant in respect of a threatened disturbance of his possession Where, on the other hand, both sets of

"Respective liabilities"-The liabilities of all the defendants need not he the same, and there will be no misjoinder if some of the defendants are found not to he liable Thus, if in a suit against six persons for possession of a certain share of land and in the alternative for its rent, the fact that only one of the defendants is found to be in possession and that a portion of the claim for rent is not sustainable against another defendant, is not a ground for dismissing the suit altogether for misjoinder of defendants (3) An insolvent and his trustees have been sued together, though their habilities were not the same (4) It was held there was no misjoinder in a suit against two agents one of whom was hable to account for twenty years and the other jointly hable with the former for the last two years of this period (5) The suit, however, has been held to be bad where the plaintiff has united different causes of action in one suit against different defendants who were not jointly liable in respect of each and all of such causes of action (6) Where the defendants combined to keep the plaintiff out of his property it was held they were properly joined (7) In the under mentioned case the right to relief, so far as regards the first and second sets of defendants, was a right to relief against them severally but the cause of action arose out of the single subject matter, which formed the subject of the plaintiff's original mortgage (8) Where there is no misjoinder of causes, a plaintiff is permitted to hring a single suit against a number of persons, even though some of them may not be in terested in the entire subject matter of the suit (9) The general principle

6. The plaintiff may, at his option, join as parties to the Joinder of parties liable same suit all or any of the persons severally, or jointly and severally, hable on any one contract, including parties to bills of exchange, hundrs and promissory notes.

Joinder of parties in same contract. This rule, which corresponds with sect 29 of the last Code, is the same as r 6 of O 16 of the English rules, except that the word "hundis" has been added. It is a modification of the general principle which required that wherever more than one person was liable to contribution to the plaintiff's demands, they should all be made parties to the suit (1) The word "contract" is, however, to be construed strictly, and a hability to account under a will is not a liability under a contract (2) In Baldeo Prasad v Grish Chundar, (3) the endorsee of a cheque sucd the endorser for a duplicate or the amount of the cheque said to have been lost and the High Court ordered the plaint to be returned so that the drawer night he joined as a defendant, but this was on the ground that a duplicate chequo could not be given by the endorser without the co operation of the drawer. The rule is merely an enabling one, and does not prevent the joinder in any case in which it would otherwise be proper Thus it has been held that the drawer and the acceptor of a bill of exchange may be joined as co defendants in a suit brought by the holder (4) When two out of three defendants hable for a joint debt had promised to pay separately it was held that the suit could proceed against them only (5)

"Is in doubt"—This rule which is new, is taken from O 16, r 7 of the English rules with some slight verbal modifications. It has been held under that rule that while alternative relief of different kinds may be given against alternative defendants, (6) it does not enable a plaintiff to bring separate causes of action against different persons in one action (1) The costs of a successful defendant sucd in the alternative may be ordered to be paid by the unsuccessful co defendant (2)

8. (1) Where there are numerous persons having the same one person may sue or detend on behalf of all in same interest. One or may defend, in such suct, one or be sued, or may defend, in such suct, on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons or any other cause such service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defended under sub rule (1) may apply to the Court to be made a party to such suit.

Scope of Indian and English rule—It is a general rule that ill persons interested ought to be made parties to a suit however minimerous they may be, so that the Court may be enabled to do complete justice by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested and that the orders of the Court may be safely executed by those who are compelled to obey them, and future litigations may be prevented, also that a person who ought to be, but is not, a party to a proceeding is not ordinarily bound by any decree or order passed therein. This rule yields to the exigences of particular cases, and there are well established qualifications to it, such as the power of the Court under this rule to make a representance order (3)

This rule, which corresponds with sect 30 and a portion of sect 32 of the last Code,(4) is the same as the English r 9 of 0 16, except that in the present rule the word "suit is substituted for 'cause of matter and it is here necessary to obtain permission of the Court for suing also, while under the English rule the permission is required only for defending a suit on behalf of others. The second sentence also has been added (5). The effect of the statutory rule is merely to give Legislative sanction to the practice which long prevailed in the Equity Courts of England. The great risk from abatement, and the mean remember on the expense involved in a great number of persons being parties, led those Courts to recognize the representative system as it was not inconsistent with general principles that certain judicial proceedings taken by or against, a select number as representing a large class might, if fairly and honestly con ducted, bind or henefit the whole class (1)

In the first place, the rule does not constitute but presupposes the existence of a right to sue, without which it can find no application (2) The rule deals with procedure only, and does not affect substantive rights (3) In the under mentioned case, (1) Shephard, J, referring to the case of Jan Ali v Ram Nath, (5) observed that "it seems to have been considered that the granting of leave under the section would have made up for the insufficiency of interest dis closed in the plaint," hut added that "with great deference, that view appears to be incorrect "

Nextly, assuming that a right of suit exists under the substantive law, the rule is merely au enalihug one, allowing a suit to be instituted under certain circumstances hy some of the persons interested on behalf of all (6) Beverley, J, observed, in the case first cited, that "there are no words in the section to the effect that where persons have the same interest in a suit they are debarred from sumg either jointly or severally unless they obtain the permission of the Court to suo on behalf of all the persons similarly interested," and "the section does not forlid them from suing in their own right, it merely says that if they desire to sue on behalf of others, they must obtain the permission of the Court" Amoer Ah, J, after observing that "that section is an enabling section, and must be read in conjunction with Explanation V to sect 13' (corresponding with sect 11), said "The effect of sect 30, therefore to my mind is that unless such permission is obtained by the person suing cr defending the suit, his action has no binding effect upon the persons whom he chooses to represent Where there is a joint right it may be necessary for all persons jointly interested to be joined as parties, and if they are not joined the suit may be bad for misjoinder. In order to prevent the record from being unnecessarily encumbered hy many names, sect 30 allows one or more persons having a joint interest to suo or defend with the authorization or permission of the Court on hehalf of all Tho section, in fact, embodies a ruls of convemence based on reason and good policy but in my opinion it was not intended to take away, nor does it take away any light. It seems to me that sect 30 does not give any warrant for the contention that because a person has a right in common with others he may not maintain an action for the establishment or enforcement of his own right There is no obbgation on him to sue or defend on hehalf of others, and if he does not seek any rehef on behalf of those who have an interest in common with him or to bind them by his action, there is nothing in the section or in any other law to dehar him from maintaining the action Even if he were to bring a suit on behalf of himself and the others he may choose to go on with the action on his own behalf, and would be entitled to do so if he mides the necessary amendments. The English calls on the point are collected in Daniell's Chancers Practice (I) and tend to show that the plaintiff of he has a right in himself to bring an action, or the defendant. if he has a right in himself to defend an action, is entitled to sue or to defend in any way he chooses without making any person a party to the action or to the defence so long as the effect remains confined to hunself "(2). "Numerous."-There is no absolute rule as to what number will be considered sufficient, though in the case mentioned (5) twenty persons were not considered sufficiently numerous. A question as to the applicability, however, of the rule has ansen where the parties are numerous. This rule, as already observed, deals with procedure only and does not confer substantive rights of suit. Under the ordinary rule of the substantive law no action is maintainable by a private judividual for an infrincement of the rights of the gineral public, unless he has suffered special damage (6) As this rule presupposes a right to suo it gives none where there is otherwise none. This rule does not therefore allow one or more persons to sue on behalf of the ceneral public (7) In the case therefore of an infringement of a right of the public at large no suit will be under this section, or at all, unless on proof of special damage, in which case either one person sucs in respect of his individual right, and the rule does not apply, or if he should suc on behalf of others similarly specially injured. he sues on their hehalf and not on behalf of the general public (8) In the case cited(9) it was held that a suit could not be brought on behalf of a portion (10) of the ceneral public, such as the Hindu community, as the entire Hindu community was meabable of ascertainment, and that the words "numerous parties" (in the former section) meant parties capable of heing ascertained, as "seems clear from a reference to the provisions for service of notice upon all such parties" (11) No doubt the rule is often applied where the parties though numerous can be definitely ascertained as in the case of

⁽²⁾ The same view was taken by Shephard, J. in Srinivasa Chariar i Raghava Chariar, 23 M. 28, 32 (1897), where it was pointed out that there was an individual right to sue, and that if the course prescribed by this Rule was not followed in a case such as that dealt with, the only consequence was that the judgment did not bind the persons whose names were not on the record. In Kalidas v Gor Parjaram, 15 B 309, 319 (1890), and Tanudin v Pandu, 18 B 699 (1893), the corresponding section was held to be in applicable, as the plaintiffs sued for them selves, and it was not a case of persons suing on behalf of a class

creditors,(1) legatees,(2) members of a samaham,(3) dehenture holders, bond holders, club, and the like (4) The rule, however, is not limited to such cases The decision of the Madras High Court, (5) which was cited in the Calcutta case,(6) is not an authority for the principle hald down by the latter. The Hindu community, (7) no more than the Mahomedan community, (8) is not tho general public but only a particular portion, though it may be a large one of the population of this country, which consists of various races and creeds (9) Nextly, the observation of the Madras High Court that the section is "rather designed to allow one or more persons to represent a class having special interests," seems to show that the decision in the Calcutta case is incorrect even according to the Madras decision which it approved (10) Further, the provisions of the rule as to advertisement appear to have been overlooked and, lastly, other decisions are not consistent with it One or more persons have been allowed to represent classes of the general public having special interests, though they cannot sue on behalf of the whole general public So suits have been allowed by one or more persons on behalf of others of a sect,(11) caste,(12) worshippers at a mosque,(13) parishioners of a church,(14) fellow villagers, (15) or class of villagers (16) All these cases are suits on behalf of a defined class, though that class is composed of a more or less "indefinite number of persons "(17) Thus in one of the cases cited (18) two Brahmins were per mitted to sue to enforce a trust for the benefit of Brahmins generally, of whatever kind or sect or place In many if not in all of these cases if the matter is looked at strictly, it cannot be said that all the parties are capable of being ascertained so that's notice might if required, be served on each and all of them An inquiry made for such a purpose would have no abiding result While it was being made, and after it had been made its subject matter would constantly he hable to change, owing to deaths and hirths, new arrivals and departures of the members of the class on whose behalf the suit was sought to be instituted. The limitation of this rule, therefore, to cases where the parties can he ascertained has been dissented from in a case in which it was held that the Satchari caste of Chatra was a defined class of the general public and that the suit had been properly instituted under the former section, whether all the members of such caste were or were not capable of being so accurately ascertained as that notices could, if required, he served on each and all of them (1)

To sum up, no suit ean he brought on hehalf of the general public a suit may lie on hehalf of a class of the general public having special interests, though that class may consist of a more or less indefinite number of persons, as also on hehalf of numerous parties who can, in the strict sense, he accurately ascertained, as in the case of a suit by a legatee on hehalf of all other legatees

" Persons "-" Parties" was the word used originally in the corresponding rulo of the English law, but it has since been altered to "persons" In Oriental Bonk Corporation v Gobind Lall Seal,(2) it was contended, without success, that the word "parties" did not mean persons in the position of creditors, but "only porties necessary to the suit without whose presence on the record the suit would be defective," and Norris J, observed that the word "parties" meant persons, and "that the provisions would be unintelligible unless the word received that meaning" In occordence with this decision the word "persons" has been substituted for the word "parties" in the former Code as being the more appropriate expression. As a result of the representative system enacted in this rule, the parties represented by another, though interested, will not he parties to the suit, (3) but they can apply to he made parties, and if any person thinks that he is not properly represented by the plaintiff, os holding different views from his, he should apply to he inade a party personally (1) It has been held that it is undesirable that individual creditors should be added as parties in an administration suit, unless they can show strong reason to think that the person who has filed the suit on their hehalf is not conducting it properly (5) Though the effect of an order under this rule is that the parties, who have obtained permission to sue as representatives, have the conduct of the suit on hehalf of all those they purport to represent, yet if any person is dissatisfied with the conduct of the suit or deems that he is not properly represented, it is open to him to make an application to secure his views heing properly represented and if necessary to take the conduct of the suit out of the hands of those who by the permission of the Court represent him (6)

A represented purson should not be made a party simply for the security of the defendant's costs, as the Court may order security for them etherwise (1)

"Same interest."-The word "interest" in the corresponding English rule was formerly held to deneto "beneficial preprietary interest," (2) But it has been more recently held that the rule is not confined to such cases, and that, given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit is in order if the relicl sought is in its nature beneficial to all whem the plaintiff proposed to represent (3) In the first of the cases last cited, it was held that the plaintiffs had a common right, which was invaded by a common entmy, and that they were entitled to join in attacking the common enemy in respect of the common right, although inter se they might have different rights The identity of interest in a suit dopends directly on the identity of the relief sought and only inducetly on the right on the hasis of which the relief is sought. The rule is therefore independent of the joint, cemmon, or several character of the right sought to be enforced, except so far as that character may determine the nature of the relief sought Whether a right 18 "leint," er "oemmen" or "eeveral," the rule is equally applicable or not applicable according as the rebef sought is, or ie net, the same in any of those cases (4) Where there is a joint right all interested must eue, er some one or mere may sue on behalf of the rest Where the right is common or several, a complete option is given Separate ouits may be presecuted by each of the persons interested, or if numerous parties pessess the same interest, seme one or more may suo on behalf of the rest under the terms of this rule The matter has been well summarised by Shephard, J (5) who said, "The rule of the Court of Chancery, to which the section owes its origin, appears to have been made applicable in two classes of cases There are the cases in which the number of persons claiming concurrent interest in the subject matter and therefore, according to strict rule, necessary (6) parties te the suit, is so large that they cannot all be conveniently joined with any chance of bringing the suit to a conclusion And there are the cases in which numerous persons have distinct but similar rights which might be prosecuted in distinct suits For instance there is the case of numerous creditors of the same person, or that of many persons claiming a right of common or right of fishing in respect of the same property '(1) As already stated, the rule is an enabling one, and therefore a person whose individual several right has been infringed may sue alone. But he may also sue on behalf of himself and others, whose individual rights have been infringed, if they have the same interest with him within the meaning of the rule (2) Co sharers in joint property have, however, not necessarily the same interest in a suit relating to that property In Ihra Lal t Bhairon (3) the suit was hy one co sharer against three other co sharers to prevent them from usurping exclusive possession of the joint land, and it was held that the suit would lie, and that the corresponding section to this rule did not apply to it, as though tho remaining co sharers would in such a case has o co parcenary or joint interest with the plaintiff in the subject-matter of the suit, they would not have the same interest in the suit, and would not be so "interested" in like manner as be was, as it might he "indifferent to them whether the defendants usurped exclusive rights in the shamilat, or it may be inconvenient to them at this moment to assert their own rights" And this decision was cited with approval in Dhunput Singh t Pareshnath Singh (4) in which it was held that the other persons of the Saumbary seet were similarly interested in suing, though the Digambary Jains were not similarly interested. It was held by a 1 ull Bench of the High Court in Vasudevan & Sankaran (5) that sect 30 (corresponding to this rule) has no application to suits to which a harnaran is a party in n representative capacity, Shephard, J, pointing out that the interest of the Karnatan "with his right of management and possession and his obligation to maintain the junior members, is surely not identical with the interest of n junior member who has a claim for maintenance only " It has been held that n suit is maintainable under this rule where a right to a village pathway is the subject matter of litigation, even in the absence of special damage (6) Where a party to a suit represents others under this rule, the decree is binding on those ho represents, but when such a party disobeys an injunction (which is personal in its nature) and is proceeded against in execution for that disobedience, an order in such proceedings will not be binding on those whom he was allowed to represent (7)

must be dismissed,(I) and that the permission must have been obtained pror to the institution of the suit, and cannot be given at the hearing nunc protune (?) A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court, however, has held that per mussion may, as under the old Chancery practice in England, be given at any time, as it does not involve a question of jurisdiction, and is analogous to that of adding parties, and where a suit is defective as to parties the requisite parties can be added after the suit is filed (3) The decision has been followed hy the Allahabad High Court (4) and the Madras High Court (5) the latter also holding that where leave had been given after the commencement of the suit it was immaterial that an application to sue had been previously refused The permission need not be in express words (6) In the case cited, Petheram, C J , and Ghose, J , observed \H that if permission can be well gathered from the proceedings of the Court in which the suit was instituted, the Appellate Court ought to hold that such permission was really granted" The Court should exercise a judicial discretion in granting the permission to some definite person or persons, (7) and permission should be given only if the number of persons suing or defending is so large as will fairly and honestly try the legal right in dispute, (8) and every right adverse to the opposite party would be represented (9)

"On behalf"-The first part of the rule implies that the plaintiff therein contomplated wishes to sue on hehalf of other persons similarly interested in suing, they also wishing the same (10) In a recent case the Court referring to this observation, though not deciding the point, observed that as the plaintiff suod on behalf of the sect of Digambary Jams, this section prima facie applied but that there was nothing to indicate that the other members of the sect wished to hrmg the sunt (II) The present section includes also the words "or for the henefit of " "On behalf" will only ho so far as the "same interest" is concerned Thus, an order appointing a person to represent a class such as the next of hin does not affect one of the next of kin who has a distinct and independent right, (12) nor will it affect the class except as regards the property which he can legally represent (1) It has been held that persons conducting a suit on behalf of them selves and others with the leave of the Gourt under sect 30 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) have authority to enter into a compromise, so as to bind those whom they represent. In such a suit all the members of the class represented are in effect parties, and any one of them is entitled to bring himself on the record as an actual party. There is no difference between the powers of the representatives in the original litigation and in appeal (2)

Notice—The notice must include the names of the persons who have been permitted to represent others, so that the persons interested may have an opportunity of knowing who have been selected to represent them (3) It is the duty of the Court to cause service of the notices or advertisements to be published under this rule. If a plaintiff omits to loove the Court for that purpose, his suit should unb be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform this duty (1)

9 No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder is misjoinder and non or non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so fai as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it

English and Indian rules compared —This rule reproduces seet 19 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1860, and is now substantially the same with the first sentence of O XVI r 11, as it appeared after the revision of the rules in 1883 Following the English rule the rule has now been amended to include the case of non joinder also. The rest of Order XVI r 11 corresponds with portions of the following rule

Misjoinder—Misjoinder is of several kinds (5) (a) Of plaintiffs This is dealt with by this rule, which deals with misjoinder of parties only There is no misjoinder where a plaintiff is entitled to recover all the estate sued for, and the name of another person is added merely as a matter of caution (b) Of defindants. This is also covered by the present rule. (c) Of causes of action, or subjects of suit. This class of misjoinder is dealt with by O. II ir 3-7, post. (d) Of plaintiffs and causes of action. This was impliedly forbidden by the second paragraph of this section in the last Code read with sect 26 of that Code (7). But see now post, "Distinct causes of action" (c) Of defendants

Where a plaintiff alleging himself to be entitled on the death of a Hinda widow to the possession of certain immoveable property, upon the death of such widow brought a joint suit against three sets of defendants, being persons to whom the widow in her lifetime had by separate alienations transferred separate portions of the property claimed Held, that such suit was had for misjoinder of both parties and causes of action, and that sect 578 of the former Code could not be applied to cure the defect. But the plaintiff was allowed on terms to withdraw his suit as against two out of three sets of defendants with liberty to hring a fresh suit on the same cause of action (1) But see now sect 99, which is amended to include misjoinder

Nonjoinder -- Even before the revision of the rules in 1883, the Court notwithstanding the absence of these words, treated the English rule as com prehending cases of "non joinder" as well as "misjoinder" (2) It was said that it could not be legitimately inferred from the provision as to misjoinder that the surt "shall be defeated by reason of non joinder of plaintiffs who ought to sue, '(3) and that a similar construction to that put upon the English rulo should he followed here, the power given by the last clause of the first paragraph of this section in the old Code being held to amount to a direction to the Court not to dismiss a suit on the ground either of misjoinder or of non joinder (4) The amendment of the section now makes this point clear The English rule, which corresponds with this and the next rule was intended to do away with pleas in abatement and demurrers for want of parties (5) The present remedy is to apply for the joinder of the party The rule as to parties is for the purposes of justice, and the Court has ample powers under rule 10 to add parties whenever they ought to have been joined, or whenever without them the Court cannot deal with the matter in contro versy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it (6) So far as the initial stage of the suit is concerned, there can be no question If an objection is taken by the defendant to the non-joinder of a necessary party, the Court will not dismiss the suit if an application be made to it by the plaintiff to add that party, but will add the party and proceed with the suit (7) There is, however, this distinction between the two cases, that misjoinder of plaintiffs can never subsequently be fatal to a suit, though non joinder of a plaintiff in certain cases may (1) An objection may be taken to misjoinder and no notice may be taken of it. If there has in fact been a misjoinder, the suit will be dismissed as regards the party misjoined and the Court will deal with the rights of the other parties (2) Where, however, it is the right of the defendant if he takes the objection in proper time to insist upon all of certain persons being joined as plaintiffs; and if after the objection has been raised the plaintiff proceeds with the suit without taking steps to add the person or persons whose non joinder has been objected to and the Court finds that the objection is well founded, the suit must be dismissed (3) A suit may be dismissed for non joinder of persons against whom the plaintiff is entitled to relief in respect of the matter involved in the suit and whose presence is necessary in order to enable the Court to adjudicate upon all the questions involved in the suit (4) Apart from cases where joinder of parties is required under the Common Law, the effect of non joinder must also be considered with reference to any special stotutory requirements which may exist on the subject. Thus, sect 85 of the Transfer of Property Act required that all persons having an interest in the mortgaged property should be joined, provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest. This section is now incorporated as r 1 of O XXXIV. As to the effect of nen joinder of persons interested in mortgaged property, see the eases undermentioned (5)

The principle of this section should be applied, so far as may be, by Appellato Courts also (6) In the case cited, the suit was for possession of a small corner of gorah land, which had been awarded to the plaintiff on a partition of the whole culturable land of the village. Only eleven of tho proprietors were made defendants by the plaintiff, but the Original Court impleaded the entire proprietary body as co-defendants On oppeal, the plaintiff again impleaded only eleven, contending that he could obtain fall relief from them The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal for the nou joinder of the other proprietors The Chief Court held the dismissal to be wrong and observed that the lower Appellate Court should either have decided "the appeal as between the parties before it, leaving with the plaintiff the n k of not having the other defendants before the Court," or, under O XLI r 20 unde them respondents. In a recent appeal under sect 15 of the Letters Patent where in a suit instituted under the last Code, a co sharer had omitted to join parties who were apparently his co-sharers, it was held by the Calcutta High Court that the suit was bad for misjoinder since it was not under this rule hut under sect 31 of the last Code, which did not contain a saving clause in favour of non-joinder (1)

"Defeated "-If there is such a misjoinder as to cause inconvenience and expense to the defendant, the suit should not be tried, but the proper courso will not be to dismiss the suit, but to reject the plaint (2) Where there is no misjoinder of parties, but misjoinder of causes of action again t the same defendant the causes not trable conveniently should be tred separately or excluded under O II r 6(3) Where, however, there was misjoinder both of parties and causes of action, it was held that the suit should be dismissed (4)

Distinct causes of action -The second paragraph of this section under the last Code ran "Nothing in this section sholl be deemed to enable plantiffs to goin in respect of distinct causes of action" It was not to he read as if it ran "Nothing shall be deemed to enable a plaintiff to join distinct causes of action This was clear from the provisions of sect 45 of that Code, and O II r 3 of this which distinctly enable a plaintiff to join in the same suit several causes between the clams of the two (1) 1 Mahomedan widow and her daughter instituted a suit against her husband's heirs for their shares in the husband's property, the widow alleging that a certain conveyance and a release which she was induced to execute under a false representation were invalid, and the daughter relying on this and on the further allegation that the widow had no power in any case to execute the release so far as the daughter's share was concerned For defendants it was contended that the suit was bad for mis somder and multifariousness, but it was held that neither of these contentions was good The plaintiffs sought their share of the family property and claimed that their shares had been improperly dealt with It was true that the defendants set up different claims to the property, but they were all based on the validity or otherwise of the release (2)

This paragraph no longer appears in the present rule, doubtless because of the amendments made in O I r 1 Probably the position now is that where two or more plaintiffs base their claims to relief on a common ground within the meaning of that rule claims may be united in the same suit

Sub Rule (1) English rule and Indian rule compared -This rule is an amalgamation of sects 27, 32 and 33 of the last Code, and the first subrule corresponds with sect 27 of the old Code (1) The latter, as originally enacted, was the same as r 2 of O XVI of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, with the exception that the terms in which the substitution or the addition of the plaintiff could be ordered were not required to be "just" but such as 'the Court might think just" Act XII of 1888 inserted further in this section the words 'at any stage of the suit," and "with his or them the former evidently to word the construction placed on the section by Pontifes, J (2) and the latter with reference to the construction placed on the English r 2 in which a person was not allowed to be joined as a plaintiff without his consent (3) This is now provided for by the third sub rule Sir Arthur Wilson in explaining the effect of the first sub rule It has often bappened that actions have been inadvertently brought by the wrong person-as by cestur que trust, instead of trustee, by mortgagor instead of mortgagec Often the same mistale has been made where it was a matter of real difficulty to say which of two persons ought to suc-as in the case of contracts made by agents, as to which it is often a question of much meets to determine who ought to sue Though the Common Ian Courts had the largest powers of adding parties or amending misdescriptions of parties, they had no power to substitute one plaintiff for another such as this rule confers (5) The same difficulty was experienced in British India as the Courts had no power here also to substitute any person's name for the plaintiff s (6) The rule, however, does not give a Court unlimited power to remodel the proceedings (7) It has been held that the power given under this rule is not excluded in cases where the person originally suing has no right to institute the suit (8)

"Suit"—In the undermentioned case (9) Banerjee J held that this word did not include an appeal, sect 582 of the former Code (corresponding with sect 107 of this) not making all the provisions applicable to suits applicable also to appeals Maclean CJ, expressed a grave doubt whether this word and "plantiff" could be read as including an "appeal" and "appellant". This doubts were, bowever, based on the wording of sect 582. The drafting has now been altered, the first portion of sect 582 standing by itself as sect 107, and the latter portion being represented by O XXII r 13. In an early case, (1) the High Court, in a special appeal, allowed the name of the real persons to be substituted for that of the receiver, who had by mistake brought the suit on their behalf in his name. And in Seshamma v Chennappa (2) the original Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the will relied upon was not genuine, and the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the suit was wrongly brought in the name of the plaintiffs as executors. The High Court on second appeal, allowed an amendment by substituting the minor son as plaintiff with one of the original plaintiffs as next friend. In the converse case where a plaintiff such one of the original plaintiffs as next friend. In the converse case where a plaintiff rule was made (3)

The principle of the section has been moreover, held to be of general application, and to apply analogically to a miscellaneous application also (4). In the case cited, an application to raise the attachment of a property was made by the Official Assignce of Bombay as an attorney of the Official Assignce of Madras, and be was, instead of the latter, wrongly described as the applicant, and Straebey, J, beld that as the affidavit annexed to the application showed the real fact, the application was not to be dismissed but aniended by the substitution of the correct name, and that the analogy of a plaint would, under this rule, support the amendment

"Doubtful"—So where it was doubtful whether a road contractor or the vestry ought to sue a trainway company which had injured the road the vestry mas therefore added as a co plaintiff in a suit by the road contractor (c). In the under mentioned case the suit was filed by a benanidar. Parsons J, said that he would hesitate before deeding that the suit was wrongly filed, but any defect there may have been was cured by the lower Court acting under this section (6)

"The right plaintiff"—The question as to who is the right plaintiff will depend on the circumstancts of the case in which the question should arise, and on the substantive law applicable. I rom a general point of view it has been explained already who may be a plaintiff. Every per on will be a right plaintiff in a suit if he could join as a plaintiff. Every per on will be a right plaintiff in a suit if he could join as a plaintiff in that suit (7). If however, there has been a bond fide mistake the Court will rectify it be where a suit was brought by one \(\times\) as the authorized manager of \(\times\) a mandalment was made by striking out \(\times\) and instituting \(\times\) his employers as plaintiffs in the case (8). \(\times\) case of misdescription mu to be distinguished from that of non joinder (1) The rule has been said to be applicable where it is found that a plaintiff cannot get the full relief which he seeks without joining some other persons as co-plaintiff (2). It may, however, be a question whether in some cases, at any rate, such a joinder should not be made under sub-clause (2). Under this sub-rule there may be substitution, with which the second sub-ruledos not deal, (3) or addition. In the case of the first sub-rule, the original plaintiff may be either a wrong plaintiff or a doubtful plaintiff. The second sub-rule deals with the case of a person who is a right plaintiff in the sense that he is a person who should sue though he may be a person who is unable to obtain relief unless others are joined as co-plaintiffs with him. The matter, however is not one of practical importance unless it be correct, as has been held, (4) that a change of parties as plaintiffs under this sub-rule does not give rise to such a question of limitation as arries under the second sub-rule

"May"—The Court is not bound to add any person. In a case() apparently under the section corresponding to the second sub rule, the Court over ruled the defendant's objection as to the non joinder of certain co shares of the plaintiff, but the lower Appellate Court decided it against the plaintiff. It was contended, on second appeal before the High Court, that that Court was bound to do justice by adding them as parties. The High Court observed however, that "if the plaintiff has insisted upon his right to bring an action in the absence of his co sharers, he must abide by the result, and that it is too late, at this stage of the case, for him to ask to be allowed an indulgence of which he did not avail himself when it was available."

"Mistake"—The mistake may be either of law or fact (6) Irj, J.(1) considered that the corresponding rule of the English law did not apply where the plaintiff did not admit his mistake and misisted on his rights, but that while the Court could not substitute one plaintiff for another, except by the first plaintiff's consent, and where he admits that he has commanced his action improperly, yet in a proper case the Court will add a plaintiff under the second sub-rule. Where a son sued for his share in the family inheritance to which his father, then alive, was entitled alleging that the father was insane, it was held that in the absence of anything to show that the father authorized the suit, the Court could not regard its being brought in his son's name and not in his own as a bona fide instale such as could be corrected under this rule (1) An action through a bon i fide mittake was communed in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff and the eves on a point of law was decaded in that have the control plaintiff that moved to substitute another as plaintiff, which was done (2). There can be no bon i fide mistake when the person asking to be ab tituted or added as quited his right to be a plaintiff since the institution of the suit and had no locus stands at the time of the institution (3). The mistake must be as to the distinction be rectified only under the second sub-rule (1).

"Necessary for the determination'—Under this rule it is essential that the order for substitution or addition should be necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute (6). It contemplates, it has been said, only cases in which the necessity is of the joinder of a person as a plaintiff, and there can be no determination of the matter in dispute until such joinder—a case which chiefly irises in suits for the enforcement of or relating to joint rights by persons jointly entrusted as co-contractors joint owners and co-sharers of property, or as members of joint families or partners in business (6). The question who should be joined is part of the substitutive law applicable to the case and is not therefore here considered (7).

the second sub rule. It is no objection to the substitution or addition of another person that the suit will fail even if he is substituted or added, as the object of the provisions of the section is not that a party's case should be so framed as to succeed, but that it should be so framed that it can be adjudicated upon by the Court, whether in his favour or against him (1). The institution of a suit hy a wrong party cannot operate to keep alive the rights of one who by he delay has brought himself within the provisions of the Limitation Act (2). It has therefore often been held that if the period of himitation has lapsed as legards the person added, the suit must be dismissed (3). Although this rule only applies where the action has been commenced through a bond fide mistake as to the plaintiff, yet as the former section and sect. 32 of the former Code were both used together, the Court had full power under the combined rules to deal with all questions relating to the adding, striking out, or substitution of parties (4)

Gonsont—Reference to this has been struck out as it has been dealt with in the third sub rule. No person is obliged to have his or her name added as plaintiff in a suit without his or her consent. And the justice of the rule is obvious because the suit may be improperly brought; and it a party were made plaintiff without his consent, be might also he made hable to costs. If other parties should be joined as plaintiff, and they refuse to be joined, the proper course is to make them defendants, so that they are all before the Court, and it after may make what order it considers just as to costs (5)

"Upon such terms"—Amendment is an indulgence, and the applicant will generally have to bear costs. The terms usually imposed are that, if the original plaintiff is found not to be entitled to maintain the action, he must pay the costs up to the time of the joinder or substitution, and that the plaintiff joined or substituted will be entitled only to such rehef as he could have claimed if the action had commenced at the time of his joinder as plaintiff (6)

Origin and scope of sub-rule 2 -1 bis clause, which as well as clauses 3 and 5 corresponds with sect 32 of the last Code, is taken from r 11, O 16, of the English rules The distruction between this clause and O I r 1, is that the latter refers to the action of the plaintiff at the time of the presentation of the plant in joining defendants, whilst this rule rufers to the action of the Court at a stage subsequent to the presentation of the plaint in adding o party either as plaintiff or defendant (1) It deals with joinder and not with substitution (2) It does not apparently opply to diverce proceedings, (3) but the provisions of sect 53 of Act I of 1894 (Land Acquisition) are sufficiently large to allow the adaptation of this section to matters before the Judge referred to bim by the Collector (4) As to Revenue Courts, (5) see note It was held under the Code of 1859 that the section should receive a very liberal construction , (6) and under the Code of 1882 that the section was wide enough to much every case of defect of parties (7) The section is not exhaustive, and it was held in the case cited below, (8) that even if it did not apply, the Court bad, in the circumstances of that case, which dealt with a public trust, an inherent power to odd new parties The effect of the amendment of the section is to bring it into greater conformity with the Euglish rule (vide rost) The last clause but two of seet 32 of the last Code is now incorporated in O I r 8 Where in a suit for the recovery of possession of property the plaintiff falsely denied the title of persons whom he had joined as defendants and asserted that an exchange by which he had trai sferred this property to the defendants had never been acted upon, but it was found that the exchange had in fact terminated bis title and had been acted upon, and he could not sue the principal defendant, it was beld that he had not made a bona fide mistake within the meaning of this Court —Upon the question whether the powers given by this rule are excessible only by the Court of first instance, or both by it and a Court of Appeal, a distinction must be drawn between the case (A) where a person has been a party to the original suit, but is not a party to the appeal, and this may be (a) where the party to the original suit has died, or (b) has not been added a party to the appeal, and (B) where the person sought to be added has not been a party to the original suit

Case (A) (a) is provided for by seet 107 When the person alleged by the appellant to be the legal representative of a deceased respondent had been put on the record under these provisions, the Madras High Court held that the Court might add under this section another person who claims on good prima fucie grounds to he the representative of the deceased (10)

High Court, following this decision, added 4

The power conferred by this rule, which should be liberally construed is necessarily very wide. It should, however, be exercised in a reasonable manner, (1) and the Courts ought to take earo in its exercise. Thus, Markly, J., in the case cited, (2) said. "To bring persons on to the record, whose interests are not identical with either plaintiff or defendant, necessarily complicates the proceedings, and greatly impedes the progress of the suit. This disadavantage very frequently outweighs the advantages arising from finality of hitigation, which is, upon the whole, the best justification for bring ing in fresh parties. This alone ought to make the Courts of first instance very careful in the exercise of the power granted by sect 73 (now the present rule)." If embarrassment or inconvenience will be caused, the order will probably not be made (3)

It is not profitable, however, in a matter of discretion to attempt to formulate particular rules for its exercise Addition has been refused, where it would have led to a great variation in the plaint (4) Generally, but not always, the Court will in the exercise of its discretion refuse to give leave to add a plaintiff when the result would be to introduce a new cause of action and subject to the rule enacted by clause 1, where the original plaintiff has no right of action, he caunot by amendment under this rulo introduce a plaintiff in whom there is a right of action and so make an entirely new case (5) And generally, caro should be taken that the nature of the suit is not changed (6) But it was held in the under-mentioned case that at an early stage a person may be added as a party, even though the addition may load to an alteration in the nature of the proceedings. Thus in an action an personam against the owners of a vessel for damages caused by its collision the ship has been added as a defendant The vessel bad not heen impleaded originally, as at the time of the institution of the suit it was submerged in the harbour It was contended that it was not competent to engraft pro ceedings in personam upon proceedings in rem, but Farran, J, said "The later decisions afford no ground for the contention that at an early stage and in a proper case the initial proceedings cannot be amended so as to bring them into the form which they would have assumed in the first instance, but for the ship not being, or not being supposed to be amenable to the process of ths Court " (7)

The exercise of discretion must, of course, he of a judicial character, but will, as in other cases, not be interfered with on appeal, nuless it is manifestly laujudicial and wrong (1). It is independent of the restrictions imposed by law on the parties. So the Court may make the Government a party, even though the notice required by the Code has not been given, the absence of the notice not affecting the power of the Court in any ease (2). An application to strike out or change the parties on the record should not he made ex parte (3). And before a person is added as a party, unless he is in Court and cogmizant of the proceedings, a notice may be issued asking him to show cause why he should not he so added, and the notice should show the grounds on which either of the parties applies to have him added (4). The defendant on record cannot object to the addition of any person as a defendant, even in a suit which has been instituted with special leave required on account of the accrual of only a part of the cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Court (5).

"At any stago,' etc -Ihe rule has been here simplified The former section drew a distinction (6) hetween orders striking out and orders adding The former could be made only on or before the first hearing the latter at any tuno before the suit had actually terminated (7) (vide post) And, further, while orders of the first kind could only he made upon the application of the party, the latter orders might have been made at any time. Both the English rule and the present section contain the words "at any stage of the proceedings" Under the last Code the words were at any time," and under the Code of 1859 "at any hearing" Under the English rule it has heen held that there is jurisdiction to allow amendment, even after final judg ment, as long as anything remains to he done in the action, though it ho only assessment of damages though whether or not the Court will exercise the juris diction will depend on the circumstances of each case (8) Under the Code of 1859 also, in Vakat Chand v Advocate General (9) parties were allowed to he added after a decree had been made whereby the suit was referred to the Commissioner's Office to have accounts taken and property sold But when the plaintiff, after his case had been gone into and some of his witnesses examined applied to have certain persons made so defendants the Court was held to have exercised its discretion properly in refusing to add them at that stage, even though "they were the parties from whom, if he got a decree, he would have to receive possession"(10) Under the Code of 1882 "though

seet 31 limits the time during which the defendant may object as of right for want of partice, there is nothing in the Code to prevent his applying at any time to the Court to exercise its powers of adding persons who ought to have heen joined, or to prevent the Court from excreising its power upon such an application" (1) An order allowing a co-widow, who was not a party to the suit, to be joined in execution proceedings as a joint decree holder was not set aside, as the Court (2) was not prepared to say that the Subordinate Judge had not a discretionary power at any stage of the suit They observed, however that the power was restricted to the cases in which joinder might be necessary for the adjudication of questions raised in the suit, and that in that case that period had passed, and that "it is unusual and inconvenent to allow a persou, who might have applied before decree, to be joined as co plaintiff after decree even if it be lawful to do so, where no interest has devolved and no interest has been created since the institution of proceedings" In Tilam Siugh v Thakur Kishore (3) the suit was for a sale of the property under the Transfer of Property Act, and defendant's minor brother and sons, who were members of a joint Hindu family, and interested in the property within the meaning of sect 85 of the Act, were added as co defendants, on an application by the plaintiff, presented even after a decree had been made against him, and set asido under sect 108 of the former Code, corresponding with O IX r 13 of this If, however, it becomes necessary to enforce a judgment against persons who have acquired a title after it was made, this cannot be done by execution but an action must be brought for that purpose (4)

"Upon or without the application."—This is an application, if made of other party, plaintiff or defendant. Though other party may apply, the iesult of such application may vary according as it is made by either the plaintiff or the defendant. Thus, a person may sometimes be made a co defendant on plaintiff s application but not on the defendant's (5). And, as a general rule, a person whose right to join as a plaintiff is denied by the plaintiff on the record should not be made a co plaintiff, though he may he made a defendant (b). The plaintiff is not bound to make the application, even in cases in which the Court will usually sallow the addition of a person as a party. So while the Court will usually sanction the addition of assignees pendente lite, the plaintiff is not bound to implicat them (7). A person may, however, be made a party without the application of either party and on his own application, (8) the Court acting itself on the information of a third party. The right to make the application contemplated arises with the necessity for imaking it (1) A person may however, he added as a defendant to an interpleader suit, even if the plaintiff does not recognize any right in the party who seeks to be added to share in the thing in respect of which the interpleader suit is brought (2)

In representative buits falling within O I r 8 of the Code, a person who is not a party on record is often made such on an application by himself, and, in fact, as O I r Satates the course to be taken by any one of the class on behalf or against which a suit is brought, who desires to intervene is by applying to be made a defendant in person (3) There is a considerable difference between the position of a person who is made a defendant on his own application, and who is so mide without any application of his. The former has to make out a primá facie case before the plaintiff can be asked to meet it . (4) but against the latter, the plaintiff has to prove his case, as against the original defendant, (5) whose position as regards the burden of proof is not altered by a person being made a co defendant on his own application (6) It was held that when the name of a person who had been made a party was struck out all the evidence produced by him ought to be excluded (7). The order giving leave to strike out a defendant should provide for his costs (8) If when a name is struck out the Court has not jurisdiction to try the case the plaint should be returned to be presented in the proper Court (9) In a suit (10) for possession of land between persons, each of whom claimed to be the lessee of it, and the lessors from whom they alleged having derived their right respectively had been made parties, it was held that that had been done unnecessarily as there was no cause of action against either of them and the Court ordered their names to ho struck out And where two persons in the same suit claim pre emption in regard to the sale, but without having any joint right the name of one of them ought to be struck out (11)

As to the exercise of powers under this section on appeal, vide ante, p 50l, " Court "

The terms will be such as the Court thinks just under the particular circum stances of the ease So the Court has imposed the term that the person added a defendant should consent to be bound by all the previous proceedings in the suit in the Court, and by any order that the Court might make as to the costs of those proceedings, (1) as without such consent the evidence already existing on the record could not be used against him (2) So also a party has been added who consented to be bound by the preliminary judgment which had already been passed, the Court directing that further proceedings were to be carried on against him in the same manner as if he had been an original defendant (3) An order has been made for adding a Bank as defendant on its undertaking, if the Court should so direct, to pay its own costs and those of the other party to the action, to enter appearance at once, to appear on motion for judgment next day, and to wrive questions of form (4) And the Court has offered on the defendant's application to add a person as a co defendant against the wish of the plaintiff, if the defendant would indemnify plaintiff against his costs (5) A Court cannot of its own motion add a Receiver as s defendant, when the leave of the Court appointing the Receiver has not been obtained (6)

Striking out.—Further, no name could be struck out by the Court suo motu without an application from a party, nor at the trial, but only on or before the first hearing Thus, where a suit was dismissed against one of the defendants some time after the issues were settled, the order was set aside as illegal (7) And the name of a person who had been added as a defendant after the first hearing could not be struck out in any case, even if a notice could not be served on him on account of the non discovery of his whereabouts (8) If persons improperly joined do not move to be struck out and take a part in the defence they may be held hable jointly with the other defendant for costs of the action (9) And where a defendant having put in a statement of defence applied to have his name struck out he was refused his costs, as he had not applied at the first possible moment (10)

This distinction between orders striking out and orders adding parties has been abolished and either class of order may now be made before, on, or after the first hearing at any time, and either upon the application of the parts or of the Court's own motion It will be observed that the words in the second paragraph of the former section "order that any plaintiff be made a defendant or that any defendant be made a plaintiff do not now appear, but the same power to order this remains, as in such a case a Court would strike the party off the side of the suit in which he had been placed and re add him on the opposite side Such a transposition is made frequently in, though not confined to, partner hip suits (1) Thus, in Eduly Munchery v Vullcebhoy, (2) the plaintiff wished to withdraw, and ten of the defendants supported his application, and on the application of two of the other defendants, the Court allowed them to be made plaintiffs, and the plaintiff to he made a defendant. A defendant who has assigned all his rights in the subject matter of the suit, and has no longer any interest in it, has no right to be made a co plaintiff (3)

"Ought to have been joined," "or whose presence may be necessary."-No provisions have been laid down in the Code as to the persons who ought to be joined, or whose presence may be necessary before the Court, and the question must be determined on general principles with reference to the object contemplated by the rule, which is "to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit" Other sections may, however, be considered to furnish a guide to the Court in the exercise of its discretion under this rule (1)

In the words of Lord Redesdale, "All persons materially interested in the subject ought generally to be parties to the suit, plaintiffs or defendants, however numerous they may be, so that the Court may be enabled to do complete justice by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested, and that the orders of the Court may be safely executed by those who are compelled to obey them, and future litigation may be prevented" (5) Lord Hardwicke observed that "the general rule is that you must have all parties before the Court who will be necessary to make the determination complete and to quiet the question" (6) Lord Lyndhurst, in Small & Att-wood, (7) said that "the general rule is that all persons who are interested in the question must be parties to a suit instituted in a Court of Equity" A similar principle is expressed in Comyn's Digest, namely, "that all concerned in the demand ought to be made parties in Equity Not all concerned in the subject matter, respecting which a thing is demanded, but all concerned in the very thing which is demanded in the matter petitioned for, in the prayer of the bill, or, in other words in the object of the suit" But a person who has no interest should not be added, but only those whose claims must necessarily be taken into consideration before deciding on the plaintiff's title (8)

been held not to authorize a plaintiff, who has no right to one, to amend be joining as co plaintiff a person who has such right (1) The object is only to improve the position of the plaintiff on record, and not to allow the suit instituted hy one person to be converted in a new suit hy another proper person The same view has been taken in this country, it being held that a person can be added as plaintiff only in a suit which, though partially defective, is to some extent properly instituted, and in which the origin plaintiff has some title to sue (2) The Court should not add persons so as i introduce a light of action which previous thereto did not exist (i) The m under the Code of 1859 also was the same, and it was often held that whe the plaintiff had no right of action against the defendants, he could no mend his case hy joining as parties to the suit other persons who had a righ of action against them (4) In a suit by a purchaser of goods against the render for damages, on the ground that the hulk did not correspond with the sample the persons who had agreed to sell the same to them cannot be made parties, as, though their presence would save great expense, and prevent further higa tion, it could not be said to be necessary to an effectual and complete adjudica tion (5) In the case cited, Pontifex, J, observed that the first vendor might be made a party under r 18 of English O 16, but that bad not been embodied in the Code, and that he was not at liberty to construe this section as giving the power under clause 18 of O XVI

In accordance with the principles regulating the joinder of parties, it is a general rule that every person who has an interest in the subject of a suit may be added as a party. The interest must, however, he an existing one. Thus, in a suit hy an adopted son against the widow for his father's property in her possession, it was held that a reversioner should not he made a co-defendant, as he had no interest at the time in the property, and his interest heigh contingent inpon the death of the widow, it was a question whether he would ever have my interest at all (6). But it is sufficient that the interest is in existence at the time of the addition, it not heigh necessary that the party added should have had a right at the time of the suit, or should have derived a right from an original plaintiff (7). There can thus be no ground for adding those persons is parties who, according to the original defendants, should be interested in a portion of the property claimed, if the plaintiff withdraws his claim to that portion is igainst them (8). It is on this principle that assignces pendente lite are in England, pluntiff or defendant (I) The rule expressly provides for the addition as parties, of persons "whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit" It has been held in some cases, that only those questions are deemed to he involved in the suit which arise between the original parties, and that where new questions will arise between them and any other person there is no justification for his joinder as a party (2) On the same principle, it has even been held that if in an appeal a responden dies, and on the appellant's application the name of a person is entered on the record as the respondent's representative, another person clauming to be such representative in heu of him cannot be impleaded as a part under this section and sect 107, as the question of representative till between the two persons is not a question involved in the suit (3) In the case first cited it was held that the questions referred to in the section must be questions between the plaintiff and the defendant, and not such as may ansi between co plaintiffs and co defendants inter se In the second case the majority of the Full Bench held that a person who is not, in fact, the legarepresentative is not a person who ought to be joined, and that if the section applied it would be the duty of the Court to decide on the representative title Mahmood, J, dissented from the decision of the majority of the Court and held that the applicant had "shown a sufficient cass to entitle her to be made a respondent without the condition precedent of any decision' as to let representative title to the deceased The same view had been taken by the Madras High Court, (4) in which Turner, CJ, observed "that where there appears a substantial doubt whether the person indicated hy the appellant is the representative of a deceased respondent or a representative for all purpo es connected with the matters in hingation, and if a person other than the person indicated by the appellant lays claim to the representative character and on good prima facie grounds, and where if he be not allowed to join, the interests of the person entitled to the estate of the deceased may be prejudiced we consider the Court ought to proceed under sect 32 to make him a party to the appeal ' The Madras High Court has in other cases also construed the expression under comment in a broad sense (5) Thus, (6) a person who claimed to be jointly interested with the plaintiff in a bond on which the built was brought was held to have been rightly made a party, the Court observing that the acceptance of a construction of the words restricting them to questions between the parties to the suit would involve the addition of the words "between the parties to the suit," and that "there can be few, if any, questions which cannot be determined between the parties to the suit one way or the other, and of which the determination if they be material, will, as between the parties to the suit, not be final," and "on the other hand, the interpretation warranted by the terms would enable the Court to avoid conflicting decisions on the same questron which would work injustice to a party to the suit, and finally and effectually to put an end to hitigation respect ing them" In a suit against the personal representatives of the obligor of a bond, who was also the manager of a mull, it was contended that the bond debt had been meurred for the mutt, and the successor in the management was held to have been properly made defendant (1) The Calcutta High Court also took a broad view (2) of the expression in a case (3) in which certain lands belonging to a joint estate were held by one of the co sharers under a private arrangement and let out by him to painidars, and on partition they were allotted to another co sharer, who, in a suit brought by him against the tenants for reut, impleaded the patindars as defendants in order that the question of the tenants' liability might be decided in their presence, and the Court held "that they were properly made defendants in the suit and that the Courts were justified in trying the question of the right to receive the ront as between the plaintiffs and the painidars 'and that ' the trial of that question was in truth necessary in order to ascertain whether the relation ship of landlord and tenant between the pluntiff and the tenant defendants existed or not" The expression as used in the corresponding English rule also has received a broad but still a lumited interpretation (4) Thus it was said that the term "involved ' was somewhat elastic, and might be so con strucd as to include a great number of subsidiary or collateral rights but though it was difficult to define the meaning of it, there must be some reason able lunit (5) Esher, MR, said 'I can find no case which decides that we cannot construo the rule as enabling the Court under such circumstances to effectuate what was one of the great objects of the Judicaturo Acts, namely, that, where there is one subject matter out of which several disputes arise all parties may be brought before the Court, and all those disputes may be determined at the same time without the delay and expense of several actions and trials " (6)

Sub rule (4) - Defendant added, amendment of plaint-This rule, which corresponds with sect 33 of the last Code, is taken from O XVI r 13 of the Rules under the Judicature Act, but some confusion crept into the wording of that section in its modification with reference to the Indian law The words "if previously filed" thus appeared to be unnecessary, and what was intended to be served on the new and the original defen daut was evidently not only "an amended copy of the summons," but an amended copy of the plaint (4) The rule has now been amended so as to include service of a copy of the plaint. The rule does not contemplate that, upon the addition of defendants to a suit a cause of action different from that upon which the suit was founded, which may have occurred to the plaintiff against the added defendants, should be added to the claim. All that it requires is, that when a defendant is added the plaint should be ameuded in such manner as may be necessary, and that an amended copy of the summons and plaint be served on the defendants. The amendment there referred to is such amendment as is necessitated by the addition of a defendant, and not such an amendment as would add to or alter the nature of the suit as originally brought (5)

Sub rule (5) - "Subject to the provisions"-This clause formerly commenced with the words " All parties whose names are so added, etc " Accord ing to a strict construction of the section, these words referred to all the previous clauses of the section and therefore also to cases in which the Court had made a person a defendant of its own motion The power of a Court to add a party and the duty of that Comt to dismiss the suit as barred by limitation are two different questions, and a Court may under this section add a party necessary to a suit although it may be obliged by the Limitation Act to dismiss such suit after such party has been added (6) It had however been held (it is submitted erroneously) that no question of limitation could be raised by a defendant who has been added by order of Court after the period of limita tion But it has been held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a Court acting under the second paragraph of sect 32 of the last Code is bound by the provisions of sect 22 of the Limitation Act (7) Sect 22 of the Limitation Act, which is the section generally applicable, does not apply where really new persons are not made defendants, but only the names of those already so are

"Shall be deemed to have begun "-It has been pointed out (3) that it is peculiar that this provision is different from that in sect 22 of the Indian Limitation Act, under which the suit is deemed to have been instituted in regard to a person when he is made a party The effect of the law of limitation in regard to the joinder of defendants under the present section is, that if the period of limitation for a suit against the added defendant shall have expired before the service of summons, and the claim against the original defendant is such as cannot proceed without joining as defendant the person against whom the claim is barred, the entire claim wiff fail even as against the original defendant. Thus a pre emption claim against one of the joint vendees will ful if the summons is not served on his co vender till after the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit for the claim (4) even though the delay in the service may not be due to the plaintiff. Where in a suit a person is added as a party defendant at the instance of the Court after the period of limitation sect 23 of the Limitation Act applies and bars the pfaintiff's remedy as against the added defendant (5)

There is no reference in this section to the Indian Limitation Act in regard to persons joined as plaintiffs but seet 23 of the Act applies also to the case of joineder of a plaintiff where the joineder is under clause 2 as well as when it is under clause 1 (6)

Appeal —See sect 104 and O MIII r 1 and notes thereto The Code of 1882 gave an appeal from certain orders under sect 588 clause 2 All orders under sect 32 were not appealable but where there was no appeal from the might have been attacked under sect 591 of the former Code on appeal from the final decree (7) An order based on an erroneous construction of the section was held not subject to revision under sect 622 corresponding with sect 115 post (8) A party who had assented to an order could not of course complain of it in appeal (9). Where an order adding a defendant under this section was not appealed against and no objection was taken thereto in the memorindum of appeal an oral objection taken on appeal to such order was disallowed (10)

Under the present Code no direct appeal is given and the same rule as to revision will apply. The Code may, however, be objected to in the appeal from the final decree under sect 105, post

Conduct of suit.—This rule was originally part of sect 32 of the last Code which referred to conduct of suit by the plaintiff. The word "suit" does not ordinarily include defence, but, according to the English practice, the conduct of the defence also is often given to one of the defendants, as for instance when a surviving partner of a partnership was made a co defendant as one of the executors of a deceased partner, the conduct of the defence was given to the other executor on the ground that the interests of the surviving partner might conflict with those of the estate of the deceased partner (1) Apparently with a view to adopt that practice, the word "person" has been substituted for plaintiff

12. (1) Where there are more plaintiffs than one, any one of more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding; and in like manner, where there are more defendants than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding.

(2) The authority shall be in writing signed by the party giving it and shall be filed in Court

Appearance by one of several plaintiffs of defendants—0 III r I enacts that parties may appear and act themselves personally in all suits. The present rule provides for the actual representation of a party to suit in the course of its progress by another party on the same side, and 0 III r I listly enacts that a party may, unless the Court otherwise directs, be represented by a stranger to the suit, namely, by a professional adviser or by certain recognized agents specified in 0 III i 2, post it was held under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859 (seet 115), that it was sufficient if the authority was in writing, and that no general power of attorney was necessary (2)

13. All objections on the ground of non-joinder of misonder of misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been warved.

[&]quot;Objections"-The objection dealt with by this rule is one for joinder

or misjoinder of purties. It does not refer to objections on the ground of want of a cause of action or right of suit in the plaintiff, which may not be disclosed until the case has been proceeded with and evidence has been taken (1). In the case of objections with which the rule does deal, the question whether there is or is not a want of parties in any particular case will depend out the substantive law applicable to it. The rule of procedure does nothing more than provide that certain rules of substantive law can only be enforced or given effect to in a particular way or under particular limitations. So while seet 45 of the Contract Act is a matter of substantive law, the rule includes an objection for want of a co promisee as a plaintiff, it being intended to be a restriction on the right or necessity, as the case may be, of joint promisors or promisees to sue or be sued together, just as other limitation and procedure rules are virtually restrictions on the exercise of rights which, but for them, would exist and be enforceable (2). O II r 7 enacts a similar rule as regards causes of action.

"At the earliest possible opportunity."-The necessity for this provision and that in O II r 7 is founded on the fact that if the objection is taken in time, the plaintiff may take steps to join the persons whose nonjoinder may be objected to (3) or remedy the misjoinder of claims objected to The first hearing of a suit may, however, be the earliest opportunity a defendant may have of raising the objection, which, if taken in the defen dant's written statement, cannot be considered too late (4) But the grounds of objection must have existed before the first bearing, otherwise an objection could not have been made or wanted. If it did not so exist an objection may be made after the first hearing at the earliest opportunity after it came into existence (5) The time now fixed is the settlement of issues As pointed out in the first of the cases last cited, "cases might occur in which sect 34 would not prevent the defendant from objecting to the want of a proper party even after the first bearing, viz where after the first hearing and before decree a co parcener or remainderman or reversioner is born, or where a woman (who is a party) is married to a man who is not a party to the suit. The objection did not exist at or before the first hearing and therefore could not have been made or waived by the defendant, and if he made it at the earliest opportunity after it came into existence, he would have satisfied the spirit of sect 31' The section has been amended accordingly

If the objection is admitted by the plaintiff, the Court should, in the case of parties, act under O I r 10 and not dismiss the suit (6) and the Court may, where it is possible, whether the defendant omits to object (1) or objects and the plaintiff refuses to admit the objection, exercise of its own motion the powers given by that rule. If the objection when taken is not admitted by the plaintiff, and he does not apply to amend, but maintains the correctness of the plaint, and the Court, without immediately deciding the point, tries the case, and at its conclusion finds that the objection is good on facts proved by the defendant, the suit must be dismissed (2)

"Waived."-Where an objection as to misjoinder (3) or of non joinder (1) is not taken in the Court of first instance it will be disallowed in appeal, and the claim will be disposed of on the merits. In Dhirm Das v Shama Soondri (5) the plaintiff widow made an adoption pending the suit, but the son was not made a party, and on an objection being taken as to that before the Privy Council, Lord Campbell spoke of it as "a safe maxim for a Court of Appeal to be governed by, that an objection, which, if taken, might have been eured and which has not been taken in the Court below, shall not be taken in the Court of Appeal And sec now sect 99 which amends the former sect 578 so as to include eases of misjoinder The former section con cluded with the words "by the defendant" It was pointed out (6) that these words showed that the section did not brut the right of the plaintiff to add parties at any stage of the proceedings. Thus, in the case cited it was said "Often a defendant may be indifferent to the absence of persons who ought to be parties, hut it, nevertheless, may be most important for the plaintiff to add them in order that they may be bound by the decree in the cause The plaintiff may not, until an advanced stage in a cause become aware that persous ought to be made parties who have not been so made The defendant may be well aware that those ought to be made parties, but purposely lets the first hearing pass without objecting to their absence from the suit and thus, so far as ho is concerned, waives the right to object But his waiver of that objection would not affect the absent parties and a decree made in their absence would not bind their. Hence it is that although sect 34 hmits the defendant's right to object, the second passage of sect 32 (corresponding with sect 29), leaves it open to the plaintiff 'at any time' before decree to obtain permission to make new parties" The words have now been omitted as unnecessary Previous provisions -The terms of sect 7 of the Code of 1853, and of sect 43 of the list Code so far as regards the first two paragraphs, did not vity materially. The former declared that "every out shall melade the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action" The last Code substitutes the words "which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of," (1) and the clause "but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court" were added. The cases there fore decided under the Code of 1859 were in point (2) so far as these two para graphs were concerned The last two paragraphs were, however, new, and were introduced to do away with the view taken under the Code of 1859, that the plaintiff, though prohibited from splitting bis claim, was not bound to pursue all his remedies at once (3) This section in the Code of 1882 was therefore, in this respect, more comprehensive in that it provided that a person entitled to more remedies than one in respect of the same cause of action must combine all his remedies in the first snit, unless be obtained the leave of the Court to leserve some of his remedies for a subsequent suit (4) The present rules are in substantially the same terms as the corresponding sections in the last Code, with the exception of the omission in clause 3 of r 2 of the words "obtained before the first hearing," as to which, see post

The section enacts the general rule that "contestants are not allowed to split up a cause of action, even where they have an election of different remedies, into different actions, or to supplement an incomplete remedy they may have selected at the first by availing themselves subsequently of another "(5)

Principle and scope of the two rules—R I contains provisions of a positive and directory character as to the framing of the suit with a view to procure finality of decision (6) Where, bowever, it was argued that the phrase "the subjects in dispute" in the former section connoted the corpus or object matter of the claim, and that therefore all possible claims to the same should necessarily be offered for decision in the suit, the Madas High Court (7) said. "In our opinion the expression "the subjects in dispute" signifies the general relation between the parties to the suit for the determination of which the suit is brought. In other words, the object of seet 42 (uow r 1) is to require the plaintiff to bring forward his whole case as to the mitter of litigation on the question of right involved in the suit, and not to require him to unite all the cances of action which he may have against the defendant in respect of the corpus or object matter of the suit." In this respect, therefore, r I bears the same construction as r 2, in which there is nothing to wirrain the inference that ill causes of retire ought to

he included in the alternative, or otherwic, in one and the same suit (1) The penalty for non-compliance with r 1 is provided for partly in r 2 and partly hy Explanation IV to sect 11 The former provides that if the plaintiff omits to include a portion of the entire claim, which has arisen at the date of the suit, out of the cause of action ou which the suit is hased, he shall be precluded from sung again in respect of such portion, and the latter provides that the matter of every ground which the plaintiff night and ought to urge in support of the cause of action on which the suit is founded shall be deemed to he a matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit, and decided therein whether such ground was actually relied upon or not in the suit. In other words, r 2 requires that the whole claim which has arisen, at the date of the suit, out of the cause of action shall be included in the suit so as to avoid splitting of a claim or claims arising out of one and the same cause of action And Explanation IV to sect 11 enjoins that every ground which could and ought to have been urged in support of the claim actually made in the suit, shall be deemed to have been adjudicated upon therein, whether it was actually urged or not (2) The rule embodied in r 2 does not operate to give the defendant a ground of exception to the first suit, but hy prohibiting a second suit it indirectly compels the plaintiff to include his whole demand in the first suit (3) and is thus a complement to r 1 To illustrate the operation of r 2 over the second suit and not the first where the plaintiff claimed, by night of inheritance, for partition of one out of a number of villages left by his ancestor, and the lewer Court dismissed the claim as untenable under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, the Appellate Court held that though that section might operate as a har to ony future claim by plaintiff for partition of the remaining villages hy right of juherstance it could not be taken to he a har to the then present claum (4)

R 2, which provides against what is called the splitting of a cause of action, is founded on the maxim that no one shall be twice valid for one and the same cause (5). It is directed against two culls the splitting of claims and the splitting of remedies in respect of one cause of action. If a man omits from his suit a portion of his claim he shall not directwards sue in respect of it, if he omits one of his remedies he cannot afterwards pursue it (6). It has been said that there is no rule of procedure which is founded on better reason and good sense (7). At the same time it has been pointed out that while in order to effect the good object of preventing unneces ary litigation, suitors are deprived of rights to which they would otherwise be entitled under the general law, the Courts should be careful in carrying out there provisions to confine their scope and construction within certain recog nized limits and principles so as not to take suitors unfairly by surprile and to do as little injustice as possible in individual cases (1) So far as regards the party sought to be barred, the principle is that where the cause of action is the same and the plaintiff has had an opportunity in the former suit of recovering and procuring what he seeks to recover in the second, the latter suit is barred (2) The distinction between this rule and that of res judicala 13 that whereas the latter rule prescribes that what has been decided or 15 deemed to have been decided cannot be raised again, the present rule prohibits that being put forward which should have been, but was not, offered for the Court's decision, and in respect of which in consequence of such omission no docusion has been given. The present rule depends entirely on the identity of the cause of action, the bar being created by the institution of the suit and not by the judgment (3) The bar exists not because the point has been decided but because it should and would have been decided if the plaintiff had put it forward

The plea under r 2, it has been held (4) does not involve a question of juit diction, and no Court is bound to take it up proprio meta. As it is intro duced snuply for the benefit of a defendant, to prevent him being harassed by numerous suits, he should expressly plead it before judgment, if he wishes to take advantage of it. Further, where objection is taken to the suit the onus is on the defendant to show that the causes of action are identical and that the suit is therefore barred, (5) and he cannot in this, any more than in any other matter, plead his own wrong (6)

Rent Act,(1) as also to suits under Act X of 1859, the principle on which it is bised being one of general equity, (2) but not to suits under the Dekkin Agriculturists Rehef Act, that Act having been amended so as to remove the bar created by this rule (3). The Act of a guardian binds a numor unless unreasonable or improper, and the rule is therefore a bar to a suit by a minor who has attained inajority, and whose guardian had previously relinquished a claim (4). The rule does not apply where there has been no adjudication and leave has been specially granted to bring a fresh suit (5).

"Suit."-The word does not here apply to execution proceedings R 2 deals with the frame and initiatory stages of a suit, and is not applicable after judgment and after the rights of the parties have been decided by a decree, in which the cause of action has merged, to proceedings in execution any more than, for example, sect 11 of the last Code (or O II rr 1, 5 of this) would be applicable (6) The question as to the applicability of the principle embodied in the section might arise in two ways Firstly, where the decree gives relicfs of a different character, such as a decree for possession and a decree for costs There is nothing in the Code to provent separate and successive applications for execution as regards each of them (7) Secondly relief of a single character may be given by a money decree for, say, Rs 1000 The Full Bench in the first mentioned case reserved its opinion whether in such a case the plaintiff would be entitled to split up the execution of the decree by successive applications to execute to the extent for instance of Rs 10 The rule has been held not to apply in a case where there were two suits, and where one being struck off on the objection of the defeadant, the plaintiff applied and was allowed to amend his claim in the other suit (8) An application to file an award is in many respects analogous to a suit and therefore the privilege given to a plaintiff in a suit to abandon portion of the claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of the Court has been held to apply also to a case where the party comes in with an application to cause an arbitration award to be filed (9) As to whether a proceeding for revocation of probate is a suit or not, see case cited (10)

"Shall include"—Ordinarily a claim is expressly specified. In some cases, however, the claim in the prior suit will be construed to include a claim which, though not specially stated, is naturally implied in it. So a prior suit for redemption of land was held to have included the trees on the land, and the Court having failed to adjudicate upon the portion of the claim relating to

"The plaintiff '-It has been held that a defendant's claim to set off stands in the position of a claum by a plaintiff in a separate suit, and that he may in relation to his closs-claim, be rightly regarded as a plaintiff within the me mung of the section (6)

Conditions of applicability of the rule -Iho main conditions the caistence of which is necessary for the applicability of the rule, and which are dealt with in detail hereafter, are (a) the existence of a cause of action in the prior suit, (b) which was known to the party, (c) and which the Court had jurisdiction to try, and (d) the identity of parties, and (e) of the cause of action, the incaning of which last mentioned term in connection with the subject is subsequently defined and exemplified by reference to cases of tort, contrict, and of a miscellaneous character

(a) Existence of cause of action in prior suit presupposed -The first thing to be considered is whether the cause of action in the second suit is the same as in the first. If so, but not otherwise the second suit is barred in respect of any portion of the claim which was omitted from the first stat (7) Where there is in infringement of one right and one cross of action has arisen, the plaintiff must make his whole claim once for all in one suit If the plantiff had thus in opportunity in the former suit of recovering what he seeks in the second, the former suit is a bar to the latter action (8) But this rule, which requires the whole claim to be put forward, presupposes the existence of a cause of action and will have no application where it is found that the former suit had no came of action This will generally be the case when the former suit was dismis ed as premature, in which case the claim may be put forward in a suit brought on the maturing of the cause of action (9)

There is no but if the plaintiff had in fact no cause of action in respect of his claim at the date of the institution of the prior and and so could not have sued or properly sued, (1) and where nothing is decided but that should be sue region (2) In short, only the claim which the plaintiff is able to make must be put forward, and only so much of the claim is required to be included is the plaintiff may be able to make at the time of institution of the suit (3) If, further, a person has a claim by revision of the defendant's default, but is cutitled to wrive it and does so, he is not precluded by such waiver from enforcing has claim in the case of a subsequent default, the cause of action not being the same (4).

(b) Which was known to the party.—An omission to suc can only be a bar when the claim was known at the date of the institution of the first suit. A right which a litigant possess without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section (5). A person cannot, moreover, omit or relinquish that of which he has no knowledge. The provision as to omitting a claim clearly involves the idea that the plaintiff so omitting was, at some time prior to the suit, aware, or informed of the claim or wave of the facts which would give him a cause of action (1) It has also been held that where the facts have been fraudulently concealed, the fraud gives a new cause of action on which the second suit may be brought (2) Where, however, a person knows of the facts before the institution of the suit and omits to make a particular claim by an oversight, it is no answer to say that such omission was due to mere mistake, and was not actuated by any fraudulent or dishonest motive. If the words of a law are clear and positive, they cannot be contested by any con sideration of the motives of the party to whom it is to be applied, nor limited by what the Judges who apply it may suppose to have been the reasons for enacting it (3) Nor, where the plaintiff is aware of his cause of action, is it necessary that the amount of damages resulting therefrom should be known or even be capable of being known. So it is a general principle in cases of breach of contract or tort, that where there is but one cause of action damages must be assessed once for all (4) In some cases of wrong the cause of suit is not complete until actual damage has ensued, but when once the cause of suit is matured, the subsequent occurrence of further damage, whether after or before this has been adjudicated upon, does not originate a fresh cause of suit , were it otherwise, higgation might have no cnd, for in few cases does the damage flowing from a wrong or breach of contract cease with one event (5) Therefore, as regards damage actually incurred, all must be clauned, and as regards those which have not actually accrued at date of suit, that future or prospective damage, the e not known may be estimated, and are therefore, in contemplation of law deemed to be known, and must be claimed for once for all (6)

(c) And which the Court had jurisdiction to try,—It is obvious that a plaintiff is not debarred from having a matter tried in a second suit if by reason of the absence of necessary jurisdiction it could not be heard in the first. He is entitled to have his claim adjudicated. All that the section says is that if he had an opportunity of having it adjudicated, which he neglected

A reasonable construction must be put upon the section, and the words "whole" claim must be understood with the qualification, "in so far as it is cognizable by the Court in which the suit can be lawfully entertained "(1) It was intended to prohibit a second suit when the whole claim arising out of the cause of action was within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court in which the plaintiff had brought his first suit, or such suit had been made cognizable by the Court in point of pecuniary value by the relinquishment of a portion of the plaintiff's claim under the express provision in the same section (2) If the first Court had, in fact, no jurisdiction in respect of the claim, or any portion of it, the plaintiff need not, and indeed could not, have sued If, in the same circumstances, and in the belief that a Court has jurisdiction, a party does sue, he cannot he said to relinquish or omit a claim which is put forward, even though erroneously If, therefore, as in the first case next mentioned, a party suce and obtains a deerce which is infruetuous for want of jurisdiction, or, as in the second case, he is refused a decree, he is not precluded from sung again. Where the cause of action was not split because the plaintiff did not in the first case either relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim, and the necessity for the second suit arose out of the fact that the decree in the first suit was infructuous so far as regarded a certain portion of the property, in consequence of its having heen made without jurisdiction the section was held not to apply (3) And where a plaintiff had a right to sue his mortgagor for the mortgage debt in the Court within whose jurisdiction the mortgagor resided, the fact that he erroncously claimed in that suit relief against the lands which that Court had no jurisdiction to give, and therefore refused, did not har a subsequent suit in the proper Court to enforce the mortgage hy sale of the mortgaged property (4) The principle has been held to apply even where the jurisdiction might have existed with a permission which was never applied for So where at the date of the former suit the land in respect of which the subsequent suit was brought was subject to provisions which deprived the Courts of jurisdiction except where authority was given by Government to entertain a particular suit it was held not obligatory on a plaintiff to obtain the permission of Government The latter was not bound to give the Courts jurisdiction, and might possibly refuse it, or might give it after such a lapse of time as would be a bar to a party proceeding with the rest of his claim. Innes, J said 'If at the time of a cause of action so arising to a plaintiff, or in the interval between that and a subsequent date, any part of his claim is not cognizable by the Court, it cannot I think be intended that he must postpone his suit for the cognizable portion of his claim until the Court acquires jurisdiction over the portion at present uncognizable or be barred of all future semedy for the recovery of that portion" (1) Under the Code of 1859, where preperty was in two districts, it was necessary to apply to the High Court under sect 12 of that Code for sanction of the trial It was held in some cases that a plaintiff was not bound to include all such properties in one suit, and to apply for sanction, and that he might sue separately in each district (2) The Calcutta High Court, however, held that a plaintiff should include all properties and apply for sanction (3) Sanction, however, is no longer necessary for the exercise of jurisdiction over the whole property by a Court in which any portion of it is situate, and the plaintiff has now an absolute right to sue for the whole of the property situate in several districts, in any one of such districts A suit, therefore, for partition must include the property in all the districts, and a suit fer partition of property in any one district will not be allowed (4) The principle applies to defect of material as ef local jurisdiction The former Court must have had jurisdiction to try the particular question raised in the second suit. Where the former suit was instituted in the Revenue Court, a subsequent suit in the Civil Court is not barred in respect of a matter not triable by the Revenue Court (5)

(d) Parties must be the same -Not merely must both suits arise out of the same cause of action, but they must be between the same parties, or between parties under whem they, or any of them, claim (6) This rule buts a second suit only when the plaintiff in that suit was also the plaintiff in the first (7) But if a person would have been barred, se will a person claiming through him as heir, (8) or assignce And as a plaintiff having an entire demand cannot divide it into distinct parts, and maintain separate actions upon each by parity of reason he cannot by an assignment enable others to de it (9) In the under-mentioned case (10) it was held that the Advocate General as plaintiff in that suit was barred by a decree in a previous suit under this The trustees in that suit, having then onutted to ask for an account, could not sur again. The Advocate General represented the same interests as they did, and was therefore equally bound It was, however, held that even if that were not the case the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, would not direct the account asked for. As regards defendants, however, it is to be observed that this rule bas reference to the subject matter of the claim, and not to the persons against whom it may be made (1) It occurs in an Order which relates to the frame of a suit, and not to the array of parties. It lays down no rule as to who is to he impleaded as a defendant. and does no more than provide that the plaintiff must include, in the relief he asks for in his plaint, the whele claim he is entitled to make in respect of his cause of action against the defendant. It nowhere prescribes that where one person has two distinct causes of action, different in their uature and in their incidents, respecting the same property, one against one person, and one against another, he is bound to join those causes of action in one suit (2) Not only must the plaintiff be the same, but the bar applies only to a suit against the same defendant (3) This rule does not affect that which lays down the principle of har for jointness The principle of the maxim, Nemo debet his texari, upplies not only to the case of one individual being sued twice for the same cause of action, but also to the case of a person suing twice on the same contract (4) The rule that n decision against n joint, not joint and several, contractor, or n joint tortienser, is n bar to a suit against another contractor or tortfeasor, while preceeding also en the ground of unity of cause of action, is based on a different principle, viz merger of the right of action in a judgment (5)

(c) And there must be identity of the cause of action—In order that the action should be a bar, the cause of action must be the same in both suits, both claim and remedy have reference to the same cause of action. The rule has no application where the causes are distinct. The rule does not compel a plaintiff, who has several causes of action, to lump them together under the penalty of having a subsequent suit harred. It applies only where there has been a sphiting of a single cause of action. As pointed out by the Privy Council the "section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action, or every claim which the party has, but every sunt shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, meaning the cause of action for which the suit is brought" (1) It has also heen held, in the under mentioned case, (2) that a plaintiff was not bound to alter the nature of his suit upon the addition, at their own instance, of certain persons as defendants. In this case a suit bad been brought by A for the recovery of certain moveable property. Two persons were in possession of a house, which, as well as the moveable property, had originally belonged to the same person. They were, on their own application, added as defendants. In a subsequent suit hy A's son to recover the house, it was held that his father was not bound to set up a claim to the house in the first suit against the added defendants. To have done so would have heen to alter the nature of the suit as originally brought, and to have offended against the provisions of sect. 44 of the last Code and O. II rr. 4, 5 of this.

As in the case of res judicata, the claims in the two suits must have been made under the same office. The plaintiff must not only be the same person, but his must he suing in the same right. Thus, a suit for damages, under Lord Campbell's Act (corresponding to Indian Act XIII of 1855), is no har to a suit for damages suffered by the personal estate and effects of the deceased, masmuch as the action under the Act is not connected with the estate of the deceased, and the damages receivered form no part of that estate, whereas the second action is brought by the executor or administrator as representing the estate of the testator or intestate (3)

In order to determine whether in any case the causes of action in the two suits are the same, it is necessary to determine what was the cause of action in the former suit, and this cause of action, it has been held, must be sought for between the four corners of the plaint (1). The Court has not to see how the facts stood upon the finding of the Court in the first suit. The question to be determined turns not upon what was the proper suit for the plaintiff to have brought, or the proper remedies for him to have applied for, having regard to the facts as found upon the tril of the first suit, but upon whether the causes of action alleged in the plaints in the two suits are one and the same, or are distinct (2). The cause of action as alleged in the plaint cannot be altered by the result of the suit (3). So where a suit for confirmation of possession is dismissed upon the ground that the plaintiff is not in possession, such suit is no har to another for recovery of possession (4). And in the under-mentioned case (5) it was held that there was nothing in the former section which would justify the Court in going behind two honds to consider the circumstances out of which they sprang, albeit those circumstances might themselves at the time constitute a cause of action.

Meaning of "cause of action"—The meaning of the term "cause of action" has been discussed in the notes to sect 20 and O I r 1, ante. The question of the identity of the cause of action in the two suits will depend our siderably on the circumstance whether, in cases other than those in which the cause consists merely of a right, the term is used in its restricted sense of the infringement of a right, or in the wider sense both of the right and its infringement. The wider the meaning which is attached to the term 'cause of action," the more restricted is the operation of the section, for if the term is composed of only one element, there is more likelihogd of the identity of the two suits than where their identity is required in all of several elements. The term has, in connection with this section, heen defined in a number of cases in its wider sense, (6) though there are others in which the term appears to have been understood, though net expressly stated to have been used, in its restricted sense (1)

It was said of the last Code that the term " cause of action" had not been used in all its sections in precisely the same sense (2) It is to he construed with reference rather to the substance than to the form of action (3) The test has been said to be whether the same evidence and arguments apply in the two cases (4)

The cause of action must be distinguished from the subject matter (5) of the suit, as well as from the relief (6) claimed The words have no relation whatever to the defence, hut refer to the grounds set forth in the plaint (7)

If the causes of action in two suits are separate, the fact that the suit which might have preceded in point of time has actually been posterior does not affect the question (1). Nor does the fact that joinder of claims might be under without being open to the charge of millifariousness take away the plaintiff's right to bring separate suits in respect of separate causes of action. Because a plaintiff has not formerly availed himself of the right to join separate claims when that is permissible, that is no objection under this section to a subsequent suit (2).

Prior valid causes of action cannot be made into one by a transaction which is inoperative in law and challenged as such in the suit. So a suit to cancel a release, obtained by duress of all claims against defendants, and to recover the amount of one such claim, was held to be no but to subsequent suits upon other causes of action so released (3). The same rule applies if a locument is madmissible in evidence and, in consequence, a party sues on the original transaction prior to such document. So where a balance was found due between the parties, and a promissory note was executed providing for its payment by instalments, and the note being madmissible for want of samp, the plaintiff had to sue on the original transaction, he was held to be bound to sue for the full amount, and a suit for the amount due for some of the instalments provided for in the note was held to bar a subsequent suit for the balance (4)

The duty to obey a foreign judgment is a new and separate cause of center from that of the original cause of action to which the judgment gave effect (*)

Each right which gives a right of action as also, as a general rulo, distinct acts, constitute separate causes of action (6). So as regards separate rights, a cause of action in respect of injury to a proprietary or permanent interest in an estate is not the same as that in respect of injury to a temporary or lease hold interest, (7) and the cause of action accruing to a co sharer by reason of exclusion from joint possession is not the same as that which he possesses to have the joint estate partitioned, (8) nor is the cause of action the same in a

Torts -As a general rule, every tort is a separate and indivisible cause of action So a claim in respect of a distinct prior tort need not be included in a suit on a subsequent one, and will not be barred by the suit on that other, (7) even though the suit brought might have embraced the claims on both the torts (8) Each of several wrongful ahenations of property constitutes a separate cause of action (9) A suit for recovery of land A from X is no bar to a suit for the recovery of laud from Y, though the title thereto is the same, and the causes of action may have arisen at the same time, both the persons withholding and the property being different (10) An act prejudicially affecting more than one person gives to each a separate cause of action, as if the act done to each were separate So a libel against several persons has often been held to afford a separate cause of action to each (11)

Even in the case of the same person, if his rights in several capacities are infringed, there will be a separate cause of action to him, masmuch as he will be considered in each case as if he were a distinct person (1) Where the plaintiff's right is infringed by more persons than one, and by different acts done separately by each of them, the plaintiff has a separate cause of action against each of those persons (2) A tort, though connected with a contract, constitutes a distinct cause of action from breach of the contract, and so a suit for the hire of a carriage will not bar a suit for the injury done to it during the hirer's use of it (3) And so as regards distinct acts constituting distinct causes of action, where, for instance, some co sharers sell their shares on different dates to different persons, each sale gives a distinct and separate cause of action to the remaining co sharer claiming all the shares sold by right of pre emption (4) So also a suit on an unduly stamped instrument, for which the plaintiff had to pay duty and penalty, does not har a buit for recovery of amount so paid, (5) there being two distinct causes of action. one of which accrued since the institution of the former suit. Unity of title to different properties injured does not make the different acts e iusing the injuries a single tort. So a man's right to enjoy a piece of land may depend upon one and the same title, but if he is ejected from different parts of it hy distinct acts of ouster, each act of ouster would constitute a distinct and separate cause of action (6) There is, it is submitted no question but that there is no unity of cause of action in such cases where there is no unity in the act of dispossession, even though the plaintiff's title may be one and the same So, conversely, if the alleged wrongs be distinct and separable, committed by several persons, and proceeding from no combination or conspiracy of such persons, the wrong doors must respectively be sued separately in respect of their own misseasance, and not collectively in respect of wrongs to which they have been neither directly nor indirectly parties (1) A question may, hewover, arise as to the unity of the cause of action where there is unity of the act of dispossessien, that is, infringement, but different rights infringed If the term "cause of action" he given its wider sense, then in such cases it cannot be said that there is identity of cause of action It has, however, been held that it is not the title upon which a party relies, but the infringement of it, which constitutes his cause of action (2) The fact that a defendant's title rests upon different and distinct transactions, supported by distinct and separate evidence, does not necessarily imply that to a party contesting that title there are different causes of action warranting separate suits (3) The unity of a tortious act is not affected by the different modes in which it causes injury Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff may recover damages not only for his unlawful arrest and implisonment and for the expenses of his defence, but alse for the many caused to his good fame and character hy reason of the false accusation, aud, in consequence, a subsequent suit for the latter will be barred (4)

An act sometimes consists of a series, and se may an act constituting a tert. The various acts may thus constitute a single wrong, so as to furnish but a single oause of action. As a general rule, acts of a similar character, performed in pursuance of the same general purpose, constitute one act and one tort, particularly self the acts are done at the same time, or in actual continuation (5). So a linel constitutes a single cause of action, even though it consists of several statements in the libelless pamphlet. A litigant cannot select one portion of a libel as the ground for a second, and so on (6)

tion does not constitute a separate cause of action, but is only the consequence of the seizure So, after a suit for recovery of property, a suit for damages for wrongful detention of the same property is barred (1) In such cases there is one cause of action, for which damages must be assessed once for all, and different remedies. The same principle has in some cases been applied to suits for mesne profits of land from which the owner is dispossessed; (2) and a smt for possession of land has been held a bar to a suit for mesne profits of that land (3) It has, however, in other cases been held to the contrary, both on account of sect, 10 of the Code of 1859,(4) and sect 44 of the last Code, corresponding with O II rr 1, 5 of this, (5) that claims to recover possession of immoveable property and for mesno profits are distinct claims, (6) and, conversely, a suit for mesne profits of fand has been held not to bar a suit for its possession, the fact of the priority of the suit for mesne profits being immaterial so far as the construction of the Code is concerned (7) These cases proceed on the principle that the right to possess immoveable property and the right to enjoy the profits of such property are distinct causes of action causes of action in a suit to recover possession under seet 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and in a suit to recover mesne profits, are not the same, in that in the first case the party is entitled to recover possession though he had no title, whereas, if he were a trespasser, mesue profits would not be given against the true owner (8) But where a suit was brought for possession of mortgaged

As to whether or not there is a new cruse of action in the case of con timing torts, the general rule appears to be that in the case of such torts as are not of a necessarily injurious and permanent character, there is a continuing obligation to about them, and the continuance of the noisauce is held to be a new tort and therefore a separate cause of action, but the rule is other wise in the case of all torts of a permanent character which continue to operate injuriously without any external agency (2) While if there are different persons injured there are different torts, the question as to the number of cluses of action which the same person may have, turns upon the number of torts and not upon the number of different pieces of property which may have been injured. Thus an act which damages two properties belonging to the same man it the same time and by the same means does not create two causes of action. The elements of damage are multifarious but the cause of it is a must, but it will be otherwise if the couse itself is not single and indivisible (3) A suit for certain moneys said to have been misappro printed by the defendant while acting is manager of a joint family, was held to bur a subsequent snit for the plaintiff's share of certain joint paddy held by the defendant at the time of the first suit, Mitter, J., observing causes of action in both the cases originated in the refusal of the defendant to give to the plantiffs then share of the properties realized by him as manager the manager of a joint Hindu family holds possession of various items of property on behalf of the family. Our it he contended for a moment that each member of the family has a separate cause of action for his share in each item of those properties? (4)

An act which cluses injury both to person and property may constitute different torts. Both cluses of action may be founded upon one act, but they are not on that acount identical cluses of action (5). All the clums in

In the following cases the cause of action was held to be the same—Where an occupancy terrint unde a mortgage with possession of his holding, a suit by the proprietor for the cancellation of the mortgage was held to bar a suit for the possession of the holding, as the cause of action in the two suits would be the same, the defendants taking possession under his mortgage not affording a second and distinct cause of action from the execution of the deed itself (3). "Shall not afterwards sue'—The bar is not worded by an expression of intention to sue again (3) A plaintiff may, however, obtain leave to omit to sue in respect of one of several remedies. A suit, however which is with driwn with permission to sue again does not create any bar as the effect of such permission is to leave matters in the position in which they would have stood in no such suit had been instituted (4). The same principle was held to apply even when the suit was dismissed for non appearances of parties under sect. 110 of the N W.P. Act. 1881 with leave specially reserved to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit, the reason assigned for the decision being that before the case was struck off the plaintiff could have so amended his plaint as to have included the claim in the first suit, and à fortiors there was no reason why he should not included it in the subsequent suit (5).

The bar affects the plaintiff in the second suit if he was plaintiff in the first, and those who claim under him. (6) and it is not avoided by the plaintiff having been a minor at the time of the former suit (7) The rule says shall having been a minor at the time of the former suit (7) The rule says shall not afternards size? It does not therefore apply where the suits are simultaneous and not successive (8) In the case cited below (9) the Madras High Court held that of the two simultaneous suits both would of course not be barred and the decree in either might strind provided the decree in the other was reversed, and option was given to the plaintiff to choose which would stand the other being dismissed. Tractions of a day are however recognized and where two suits are presented on the same day it must be presuned until the contrary is proved that the suits were presented and admitted in the order in

"In respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."—The Privy Council observed that the right which a litigant possesses without knowing, or ever having known, that he possesses it can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim!" within the meaning of the section (3) It has been said that a plaintiff must be taken to have abandoned or relinquished his claim on a real cause of action if he brings it in a false one (4) But this statement has been adversely criticized, (6) there being nothing in r 2 to warrant the inference that all causes of action ought to be included in the alternative or otherwise, and if it were correct it would make no difference whether the cause of action is false in the sense that the facts alleged as constituting it are false, or it is false in the sense that the facts alleged do not in law constitute a cause of action

"More than one relief"—The present rule, unble that of the Code of 1839, refers, as has been already pointed out, both to the splitting of remedies or rehefs as well as the splitting of claims (6) Both the claim and the remedy have reference to the cause of action litigated in the previous suit (7) There is no har where the remedy sought in the subsequent suit is in respect of a cause of action different from that which formed the basis of the rehef in the former suit (8) Further, the har in regard to the remedy is applieshle only where the plaintiff was at the time of the former suit entitled to more than one remedy, and where the plaintiffs were entitled to only one remedy in the former suit the provisions of the section are not applieshle to the second suit, (9) nor where a plaintiff's suit for a remedy has been dismussed on the ground that he is not outsided to it hut to autofier remedy, for which he subsequently succe(1) In a case in the Punjab Chief Court (1) Burney, J, observed that what the plaintiff "asked for in the former surf was nat a remedy to which he was entitled, and was, therefore, nat one of the other alternative remedies between which the plaintiff could have chosen," and in a subsequent case (3) in the same Court, Tremlett, J, observed, that "if the defendant's contentions were sound, we should have to hold that the construction of sect 13 (now r. 2) is that a plaintiff entitled to only one remedy on his cause of action, who by mistake sucs for what the Court considers is not the remedy to which he is entitled, will be precluded from subsequently suing for the praper ane, 'an l, "put in this form, it is clear that the language of the section cauntenances no such proposition."

Tha rule applies to the case where there being identity of causes of action in the two suits, the plaintiff was cutilled in the first suit to more than one needy (1) either cumulatively or alternatively. If without the leave of the Court he suit to suo for any of such remedies he cannot do so afterwards. So a personal dictro for maintenance and a declaration that it is o charge on family property are two remedies referable to the same cause of action, viz the right to receive maintenance, and therefore two separate suits cannot be brought in respect of the two remedies ogainst the same defendant (5)

It is not very easy to define what constitutes "a claim" as distinguished from a "remedy," for the former appears to include the latter to some extent. Doubtless the two terms were intended to overlap. While a claim has been defined as a demand af right, a remedy has been said to be the legal moans to recover, right (6). It has also been broadly defined to denate the decree or decretal order with its proper legal results, which is the successful suitors warrant for obtaining the rehef he has ochieved by his suit (7). Vortgoga cases are comman instances in which there is mare than ano remedy. Where a person asks for rehef and anciliary thereto far on injunction there is mare than one remedy. In many cases there is an option of sung on the contract are for breach af the contract, and in these cases there is more than one remedy, but the remedues are olternative (8). In some cases the twa terms 'claim and 'remedy' are used indiscriminately. So it has been held that a suit for specific perfarmance hors a subsequent suit far damages for failure ta per form, as bath claims arise out of the same cause af action namely, the breach of contract (1) And where a plaintiff was entitled both to recover rent and to forfeiture for non-payment he was held baried after suing for the lint from suing to enforce a forfeiture for non-payment of the same rent, as both the claims arose out of the same cause of action, namely, the non payment of rent (2) Similarly, a suit for au injunction against a defendant directing him to abstain from excluding the plaintiff and pre venting him from using his house has been held to be a bar to a suit for damage; for the exclusion from the house (3) The amendment now substitutes the word "relief" for "remedy"

Upou the question formerly discussed, whether in execution of a simple money decree, only the rights of the debtor pass and the mortgagor retains his hon, see below (4) Sect 99 of the Trunsfer of Property Act restrained a mortgagee from selling the mortgaged premises, except under a decree for sale (5) Under the Code of 1859 a declaratory decree might be sued for and obtained, and a subsequent suit brought for the consequential rehef (6) But see now seet 42 of the Specific Rehef Act, which virtually repeals sect 15 of the Code of 1859 Under the special provisions of the amended Dekkan Agriculturists Act oxcluding the operation of this section, a suit by a mortgagor for account does not bar a subsequent suit for redemption, (7) though prior to the amendment of this Act the contrary was held upon the principle enacted by this section (8) If mesne profits are not asked for in a suit for specific performance of a contract to reconvey a plot of land, a subsequent suit for them will be barrod by this rule (9)

Leave to omit relief—The words in the last Code were "obtained before the first hearing" It was, however, held that leave might be applied for and obtained when the case was called on for first hearing and before anything had been done towards the hearing of the case (10) Though these words have been omitted probably the same rule will hold now Such leave should be obtained from the Court before which the original suit was pending (11) same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit.

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject-matters at the date of instituting the suit.

Origin and scope of rules relating to joinder of eauses of action .-The first paragraph of r 3, which corresponds with sect 8 Act VIII of 1859, is taken from the Linglish O 18, r 1, which, though it does not contain any reference to the case of more than one defendant, has been construed as if it referred to the "same defendants also, it having been held (I) that " to bring into one claim distinct causes of action against different persons, neither of them having anything to do with the other (and only historically connected as one matter in the transaction), is not contemplated by O 18, r 1, which authorizes the joinder, not of several actions against distinct persons, but of several causes of action" It was, however, pointed out that the provisions contained in several of the Lingbah rules had been omitted from the Code, and the inference therefore was that it was not intended to introduce into this country the wide scope now afforded to suits in the English Courts, and that r 3 is different from the much more general language of the English r 1 and r 6, which provide that claims by plaintiffs jointly may be joined with claims by them or any of them separately, and were diametrically opposed to the probibition of sect 31 of the last Code, that plaintiffs might not join in respect of distinct causes of action (2) The rule is based on considerations of convenience, the misjoinder contemplated leading to complication and difficulty of dealing with the case of each defendant separately, and heing vexatious and hurassing to the defeudants (3)

Objections (as to which see O I r 13) on the ground of misjoinder are favourile ones in this country. There may be misjoinder of plaintiffs or mis joinder of defendants. This matter is dealt with in the preceding Order. The rules under discussion relate only to joinder of evises of action. They assume that the action has been rightly constituted under the provisions relating to the joinder of parties (4). Then there is misjoinder of subjects of suit, which is sometimes called multifuriousness, though the term is not used in the Code Multifariousuess, however, properly so called, exists when one of the defendants is not interested in the whole of the relief sought (1) This is prohibited by the first clause of r. 3, where the parties have distinct and separate interests (2) Visjoinder of subjects of suit is where two subjects distinct in their nature are united in one suit, and, for convenience sake, the Court requires them to be separated Whether the various subjects shall be dealt with together is a matter of discretion to be determined upon considers tions of convenience with regard to the circumstances of each particular case (3) This matter is dealt with in r 6 In other words, while multifariousness strictly so called is, in cases coming within the terms of the first paragraph of r 3, absolutely probabited, an alleged misjoinder of subjects, as it was formerly called, not amounting to multifariousness in the former sense, is left to be dealt with according to the discretion of the Court R 3 applies to cases where there are only one plaintiff, one defendant and several causes of action, and to eases where the plaintiffs or defendants, though consisting of two or more judividuals, may be considered as an unit with reference to all the different causes of action Where there is more than one plaintiff or defendant, the test is-is there community of interest in the issues to be determined? in other words, joint interest in the questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action (4) The question of absence of cause of action and misjoinder must be distinguished. It may be, for instance, that certain defendants can substantiate pleas which, as a matter of substantive law or on the merits, would absolve them from liability But this circumstance has no effect upon the question of misjoinder, which is purely a matter of adjective law or procedure (5) While, as already stated, the rule enacted in r 3 is hased on substantial grounds of convenience, it must also he cmeinhered that the policy of the law is not to favour multiplication of suits, (6) and it is exceedingly undesirable that any suit should fail on account of any such technical objection. It was held that the previsions of sect. 15 of the last Code did not apply to suits for aircars of cent under the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, so as to admit of a joint suit being brought in respect of aircars of cent due in respect of several holdings (1).

Summary of rules on this matter .- I summary of the rules which deal with the joinder of parties, shows that any number of plaintiffs may join in respect of relief claimed arising out of the "same act or transaction," that they may not join in respect of distinct causes of action in cases not within () I r I, arte, that any number of defendants may be joined where rehef is sought a unst them under () I r 3 or in respect of any one contrict under O I r G, that no suit shall ful for mero misjoinder, and that except where plaintiffs have joined in respect of distinct cruses of netion as above stated the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy as far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it (2) Putting it shortly, the rules provide that a suit shall include the whole claim, that any plaintiff or plaintiffs having several causes of action in which they are jointly interested against one defendant or several defendants jointly may unite them in the same suit, but unless such causes of action are of the kind mentioned in clauses (a) (b) or (c) of r f of this Order they may not be joined. without leave of the Court with a suit for the recovery of immoveable roperty, that where a pluntiff or pluntiffs have united in the same suit several causes of action against a defendant or defendants the Court of its own motion, or on the application of the defendants or upon agreement of the parties may order separate trials or confine the scope of the suit, or exclude causes of action and direct amendment of the plaint, where by the joinder of several causes of action inconvenience and confusion are likely to be caused (3) Is to whether sect 15 of the fast Code was a restrictive provise to sect 28 of that Cole see post

"May unite"—It is a pre requisite of the light to Join in one suit more than one cruse of action against a defendant that the Court to which tho plaint is prescuted should have jurisdation over all the causes of action (4). In the case cited, it was observed that "unless the plaintiff could lawfully unite them, the Subordinate Indge had no jurisdation over either and that he should have returned the plainti, although, without amendment, it could not have been presented in either Court which had jurisdation over either cause of action. It is, however, proper to unite several causes of action in a suit when the tritle to all the property to which the defence relates is the same though the lands

Was sect 45 of last Code a restrictive proviso to sect 28 of that Code ? The effect in this respect of the amendments -There was force in the argument which answered this question in the negative, though the contrary was held under the last Code by the majority of the Full Bench (3) in which it was raised Chapter III of that Code dealt with the parties to a suit, and Chapter IV of the same Code with the frame of a suit The former assumed the existence of an ascertained subject matter in dispute and from that point of view laid down rules as to the persons who might be made parties to the suit Chapter IV assumed the existence of ascertained parties and dealt with the subject matter of the suit The two modes of dealing did not clash with one another. Where there was identity of subject-matter the rules governing the case were to be found in Chapter III , where there was identity of parties the seepe of the action was to be limited by the rules in Chapter IV The two Chapters thus regarded an action from two different points of view, and the rules contained in one could not, in this aspect of the care be regarded as provises to the rules contained in the other By sect 26 of the last Code all plaintiffs might join in respect of the same "cause of action" By sect 28 all defendants might be joined against whem the right to any relief in respect of "the same matter," whether jointly severally, or in the alternative, was alleged to exist The term "matter in sect 28 of that Code was not convertible with "cause of action," hut was more comprehensive-a conclusion which received support not only from the circumstance that the two expressions were used in con tiguous sections (26 27 28) of the same Chapter and could therefore scarcely he construed to have the same meaning but also from the fact that the last part of sect 31, which prohibited plaintiffs joining in respect of distinct 'causes of action' was meant to be a bmitation of the latitude allowed hy Chapter III as to the joinder of parties in respect of the "same matter" Se long, then, as the matter in dispute was identical the plaintiff was entitled to bring before the Court all persons whose presence was necessary to afford him full relief in respect of that matter Seot 45 was not applicable to cases in which the subject-matter of the suit was the same but related to cases in which the causes of action were entirely distinct Sect 28, on the other hand, related to cases in which the subject matter was one and the same and seet 45 was not a restrictive provise to sect 28, for the effect of such a view would be to nullify an important part of the latter section The essence of the provisions of sect 45 was that there should be joint rights in the plaintiffs and joint liability of the defendants, whilst sect 28 contemplated the granting of rehef against the defendants not only jointly and in the alternative but also severally, and it could not be conceived how this could be done in a case in which the bability of the defendants was joint, as required by sect. 45. The latter section did not limit the operation of sect. 28, nor did sect. 28 extend the scope of sect. 45 Not John a rule which was distinct from and independent of the rule embodied in sect. 15 (1)

According to this view of the two sections, a sint might have been brought against several defendants against whom the right to any relief in respect of "the same matter existed, and also a suit uniting several distinct causes of action against several defendants jointly.

The inspority, lowever, of the Pulf Bench held that it was deficult to interpret the expression "same matter" in sect 28 as meaning more than the same "cause of action"; and that Chapter III must necessarily be read with and controlled by the subsequent provisions of Chapter IV If, then, sect 28 and sect 15 were read together, the joint, several, or alternative hability of defendants mentioned in sect 29 meant such a hability in respect of one or reveral causes of action, which cause or causes of action were united in the same suit against the same defendants jointly, in other words, while the cause or causes of action had to be joint as to all the defendants, the rehel asked might be joint, several, or in the alternative (2) It might, it was said, be that the term "same matter" was more comprehensive than "cause of action," and that if seet 28 stood by itself it would in effect allow a joinder prohibited by sect 15 But if as was held that section did not affect but was, on the contrary, controlled by sects if and 15, which regulated the founder of different cruses of action, then seet 28 was restricted in its application to cases in which different causes of action might be joined in one suit this view, sect 28 did not affect the question of joinder of causes of action. which was entuely regulated by the provisions of Chapter IV, and a suit, though not had for missemder of parties under sect 28, might be had for misjoinder of causes of action under sect 45 It was not clear, bowever, why the two different expressions should have been used and neither of the views stated was free from difficulty (3)

The case of several hability is retained in O I r 3, corresponding with sect 29 of that Code But the words "in respect of the same matter" have been new omitted from O I r 3. For the reasons given by him, the opinion of Valimood, J, would still seem preferable even had this not been so. The position would now appear to be thus O I r 1 allows plaintiffs to join where the related claimed (whether the claim be joint or several) is in respect of or arises out of "the same act or transaction". The necessary cerollary of this is that if all persons may be joined as defendants against whom rehef is claimed in respect of "the same matter" this phrase must include what is understood defendants on the ground that there was but one cause of action Loke Nath: Keshah Ram, 13 C 147, 152 (1889). ⁽³⁾ It has also been held in a recent Madras case that the words 's same matter " are wider than the term cause of action Dampanaboy in a v Addala, 25 W 736, at pp 745, 746 (1902) The Calcutta High Court has in some cases justified the jounder of

by "the same act or transaction" in O I r 1, that is, cases where, though the cause of action may not be the same, relief is claimed on a common ground. The quadrication is now omitted, but the same result would follow even if O I r 3 had not been (as is the case) expressly amended to bring it into conformity with the provisions of r 1 of that Order. But where the subject matter of the suit is not the same as regards plaintiffs and defendants, and the causes of action are entirely distinct there being no common ground, then under r 3, in order to justify joinder, there must be joint rights in the plaintiffs and joint hability in the defendants.

Cause of action -As aheady elsewhere observed, this expression has always had a signification which cannot be said to be precise or definite (1) being sometimes taken to mean the right, together with the infringement, or the title together with the injury, in order words, all the circumstances which a plaintiff is required to allege in order to show a right to relief, and being sometimes used as indicating nierely the injury, which is the cause of the plaintiff coming into Court (2) or as indicating the plaintiff s right merely (3) These differing definitions account in part for the differing views to be found in the cases under this as other sections (1) So the right has been treated as the whole cause of action (5) On the other hand, it was held that the term as used in sect 31 of the last Code, and in the section cerre sponding with r 3, had the same sense as in English lan, viz of every fact which it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove to support his right to the judgment of the Court (6) The title on which a plaintiff suce is only one of several sugredients su the cause of action, and that term includes also the infringement of the plaintiff's right (7) The question under the section which r 3 replaces, has often arisen in cases of ahenations of joint propert) by a coparcener, or of a Hindu widow's estate by the widow, and sometimes in other cases. The cases upon the point are in conflict, and it is not possible to recoucile them. The determination of the question whether there is a misjoinder in respect of cause of action, where one suit is brought against all the ilienees, depends upon the view which is adopted of the meaning of the term " cause of action," and also on the question discussed in the last paragraph

It is most desirable that the whole of them should be at once before the Court called upon to decide the question, in order to secure the soundness of the particular decisions, and perhaps the avoidance of discordant decisions in different cases upon facts nearly the same" It would probably be best if the Courts were given, as to procedure, a discretion to be exercised in a manner to the con venience of trial and of the parties and to the advantage of substantial justice It is, however, necessary to determine the question by reference to the defini tion of the term under discussion and the other provisions of the Code If therefore, on the other hand, the words "cause of action" denote both the right and its infringement, (3) there has been said to be distinct causes of action against each of the aliences, and in consequence juisjoinder,(4) except perhaps where the suit is both against the ahenor and the ahences. In such case it has been said (5) that (there being a complete cause of action both ss to right and infringement) against the defendant alienor, it is necessary to bring the aliences on the record to afford ground for decision of the whole dis pute, and that it cannot be said that a separate cause of action exists against the alienor "in conjunction with each group of aliences, the alienations not being the causes of the present action, (6) but merely incidental thereto "(7) In a case, however, where the alienor was a party, the Bombay High Court held that the plaintiffs had distinct causes of action against the several defendants, and that there was a susponder (8) Whether, however,

The following suits have thus been held to be bad for inisjoinder -A joint action for the price of timber against defendants, who purchased each one pair of tunber separately from the other, (1) A sold to X and B sold to X, a suit by Y against A, B, and X to enforce a right of pre emption, (2) a suit claiming possession against all of defendants, with mesne profits against some and damages against others, (3) a suit by a talookdar against the zamındar and several purchasers to set aside sales to them respectively of five patni taluks sold for arrears of rent due separately upon each , (4) a claim to set aside sale against auction purchaser and for damages against zurpeshoidars, (5) a suit against several persons, each a party to a distinct contract, (6) a suit as against one defendant for specific performance of a contract to sell land and as against another for a declaration that he was not entitled to any charge upon the same lands, the cruses of action being distinct as against the defen dants, (7) a suit against one person, an alleged agent of a firm, for breach of contract and against another as partner to have accounts taken and the partner ship wound up (8)

It is necessary now, however, particularly in the case of suits by reversioners above mentioned, to consider the effect of the enlarged scope of O I r 1 and its effect on the question of joinder of defendants, for now apparently all reversioners might join in any suit any number of defendants in respect of several properties, provided they base their claims (which need not be joint but may be several) on a common ground

The relief —The cause of action must, as in other cases, he distinguished from the relief claimed. So where plaintiff, a creditor, brought a suit on his own behalf and on behalf of other electitors, asking on his own behalf to set uside a deed as void, and on behalf of other creditors for a declaration that the deed was voidable, it was held that both the plaintiff and the other creditors had one cruse of action, namely, the right to treat the deed as one which could not affect their rights, although as the plaintiff had obtained a decree which he wished to execute, he for that purpose required relief by setting uside the deed as yould (1)

A planntiff may always put forward an alternative case, (2) provided that the facts stated as the basis of alternative relief are the same. Where there is a single came of action, or saveril causes of action against the same defendant, no difficulty arises. Where the first defendant dispossessed the planntiff of land sold to him by the second defendant, and he sued for possession and means profits, or in the alternative for the refund of the purchase money from the second defendant, it was held that there was but one cause of action, namely, the dispossession and no misjoinder (3). Two separate alternative causes of action a, units the same defendant may be noted (4).

A claim for possession by plaintiffs, four onna zemindars to receive a four anna share in a patin alleged to be in possission of all six defendants, or the alternative, except as a gainst one defendant, for rent, was held not to be laid for inisponder, it being further held that notwithstanding that the claim for possession or rent might be unsustainable in fact as against some of the defendants, that was no a tround for dismissing the suit generally for

nn-joinder (5)

"Does sect 15 (now rule 3) contemplate a case where plaintiff has really only one cause of action upon which he can succeed, but being in doubt as to which of his alleged causes of action will be successful proceeds upon both with the intention of obt unma relief out of one of them? Are not the several causes of action contemplated by sect 45 causes of action which, it is alleged. cicli afford grounds for separate relief, and combined for cumulative and not alternative relief?" (6) In England it has been held that if two persons could not be tomed as defendants unless the causes of action against them were exactly the same, the object of the Legislature would be entirely defeated (7). It would sum from the cases cited that the fact that ofteruative reliefs were claimed did not authorize a joinder of soveral causes of action against several persons not jointly interested. So where a suit was brought to set aside the sale of a mehal against the persons who had purchased it at on auction sale held for default in payment of Government revenue by zurneshaidars, to whom the mehal had been let, or in the alternative for damages against the zurpeshandars who had defaulted in the payment, it was dismissed for multifariousness as the two claims were based on distinct causes of action (8) And where a plaintiff contracted for sale to bim of a house for Rs 2500, and sued illeging a subsequent sale by the defendant to a third party, and prayed for

Same defendants jointly.-It has been already pointed out that joint interest in the main questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants, the test being whether there is community of interest in the causes to be determined (2) It was held that there was no provision of the Code allowing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants, that is to say, causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested, to be united in the same suit (3) The mere similarity of the claim is no ground for joining in one suit claims which, though similar, are several and distinct against several persons, (4) nor is the convenience of their tital by one Court (5) Where a cause of action arising out of a joint account of two defendants was united with another arising out of a transaction in which one of the defendants alone was concerned, it was held that the causes of action were not against the same defendants jointly (6) Where the defendants are not jointly hable, each distinct cause of action must form the subject of a separate suit. So where A sold to X, and B sold to X, whereupon Y sued A B, and X to enforce a right of pre emption, it was held to he a misjoinder, there being distinct causes of action in respect of which the defendants had no common interest (7) So where plaintiffs in a suit for partition joined as defendants a number of cultivating roots, whom they sought to eject, it was held that the suit for partition was of little interest to the ryots, and the question of ejectment was a distinct one in the case of each ryot (8) So, also, there has been held to be a misjoinder where the right to relief against one defendant was in respect of the non fulfilment of a contract, and the right to a declaration against another was in respect of a threatened disturbance of the plaintiff's possession (9) The same has been held in a suit against defendants for possession, and against some of them for damages, and against others for mesne profits, (10) and in a suit to recover possession of certain lands by reversal of certain deeds, some of the deeds being of absolute, and some of conditional, sale (i) Although there must still be community of interest where the causes of action are entirely distinct, it will be necessary in each case to see whether this is so or whether though the causes of action are several there is a common ground justifying their joinder. On the other hand, there was held to be no mis joinder in a suit against a defendant who had obtained possession under a decree which had been reversed, as also against his lessess the latter standing in the shoes of their lessor and heing jointly hable with him to be ousted (2) In a sust against joint decree holders for the plaintiff's customary fourth share of the profits realized by the decree helder by an execution sale of different houses at different times, the decree helders were held to be joint, though their hability to give the share in respect of the sale of each house was separate (3) So, also, a suit instituted to eject all the tenants holding separate lands in a village, and to recever arrears of rent from them was held not to be bad for misjoinder, as all the defendants claimed by inheritance or by pur chase or otherwise under one and the same person, or under one of two persons who had executed the muchalla for the lands and the plaintiff therefore had a common cause of action igainst the defendants, and was not obliged to sue their separately (1)

As in other eases, (5) a person who is a party in different capacities is not the same defendant—a principle which though partly recognized in rule 5 is of general application. Thus, where a person is a party in two capacities there is misjoinder, unless each cause of action affects him in both capacities (6)

Plaintiffs jointly interested —The words "jointly interested were first introduced by Act XII of 1879 Under the Code of 1859, it was held to be a misjoinder where the causes of action of the plaintiffs were different and distinct in their nature (7) A suit brought by three persons for the possession

⁽⁷⁾ Romoons t Muneko 0 W R 5.25 (1858), m which Phear J pointing out the inconveniences of such a suit said that saving all questions of abatement and matters in amendment of the record, I have mover in my memory heard of a suit decreed in favour of one oc plaintiff and dismissed as against the other co-plaintiff. And that negative fact of usage is I think influential to show how very unpracticable quite apart from any matter of law it has been found that combined suits of this charveter should be united together and treated as if they were of numoveable property, in which two of them claimed half the property under a title by inheritance and the third claimed the other half in virtue of a sale thereof to hun by the first plaintiff, was held to be bad for mis joinder of causes of action (1) The Court said "Although it appears to us that seet 8 of Act VIII of 1809, the first paragraph of sect 45 of Act X of 1877 and the first paragraph of the present Code mean the same thing, we assume that the Legislature by the amendment of 1877, by the amend ment of 1879 and by the wording of the first paragraph of sect 45, as it it present stands, intended to make it clear that their intention was that several plaintiffs could only join in suing several defendants in one suit for several eruses of action when the plaintiffs were jointly interested in each and all of such causes of action and that the second part of the first paragraph of sect 45 is merely enacting that several plaintiffs jointly interested in the same causes of action against the same defendant or several defendants jointly may sue in the same manner, as by the first part of that paragraph it is enacted one plaintiff may sue one defendant or more jointly in one suit on several causes of action to which the defendants if more than one were parties and that it did not intend to confer a right by sect 45 on several plaintiffs to sue on causes of action which were not jointly vested in them one or more defendants, although the nets of all the defendants jointly inight have completed a separate cause of action of each several plaintiff and afforded him a cause of action on which he could sue alone ' It was assumed however by the Judges that the Legislature did not intend "directly or in dire the to prohibit the joining by Hindu or Vahomedan heirs in one suit of their causes of action in respect of what had been the property of their incestor or of the family and that it had been the practice in the North West Provinces to allow Hindu or Mahomedan heirs, even where their interests were several to join in one suit for the recovery of property which had belonged to a common ancestor through whom title was claimed, and that they regarded the decision in Ram Sewak Singh v Nakched (2) as necessarily confined to the maintenance of that practice. The same principle was followed in a subsequent case (3) in which it was held that several creditors to each of whom separate debts were owing by the same debtor could not jointly sue for the avoidance of a deed of gift executed by the debtor, which deed was alleged to have been made fraudulently with intent to defeat or delay executant's creditors the cruse of action of each separate creditor not being the same as that of the others Similarly a suit by two brothers for a declaration that the parts of the house attached in execution of decree against their father belonged to them and not to him was held to be irregular though the Court observed that the plaintiffs might well have thought that the case came within the latter part of the first paragraph as in one sense their title was a common title which was assailed by one and the same action of the execution creditor, and they were jointly interested in opposing the attachment and sale, although a sale would only have affected each man's separate interest (1). Where the cause of action in the case of the first plaintiff aimed at the establishment of the title of the first plaintiff as issueless widow of M G to succeed him jointly with the other widows, whereas the cause of action in the case of second plaintiff aimed at the establishment of the title of second plaintiff by reason of an adoption to take the estate of M. G to the exclusion of all others, it was held that it could not be said that the two plaintiffs were jointly interested in these inconsistent causes of action The establishment of first plaintiff's title would exclude second plaintiff from all right to take or share in the estate, and the establishment of second plaintiff's title would equally debar first plaintiff from any share in the estate, but a right to be maintained out of it-a right which was not brought in contest (2) The Court added "Sect 45 permits of the joinder in the same suit of several causes of action in which several plaintills are jointly interested against the same defendant. These plaintiffs are jointly interested against the same defendant in the sense that it is the object of both plautiffs to show a title in one or other of them to the whole or a portion of the estate in competition with the defendant, but this is not enough . they must each he jointly interested with the other in the second causes of action-not necessarily coughly interested but jointly interested , i c as we understand, not jointly interested as a mere matter of affection, but jointly interested as to the subject matter of the suit which the causes of action have in contemplation" (3) When two persons are interested in a pieco of land—one as meliaramdar, and the other Ludicaramdar—ind a third party commits a wrongful act which affects the rights of the persons so interested it may he properly held that the land is common to both to the extent of entitling them to sue jointly in respect of the wrongful act, treating such act as giving rise to but one cause of action affecting the two persons more or less (4) So long as several causes of action are by the same or jointly interested plaintiffs and against the same defendant or defendants jointly, they may be joined subject only to the Court's discretion of ordering their separation There are no restrictions as to the nature of the cause of action which may be so joined, as it is stated (5) there are in most of the Code States of the American Union , but the restrictions there may sometimes prove a good guide here as to the advisability, as apart from the legality, of the joinder (6) Seet 26 (now O I r 1) has now been amended so as to permit plaintiffs to join in whom any right to rehef exists in respect of, or arising out of, the same act or transaction that is, where if separate suits were brought any common question of law or fact would arise earhest possible moment, namely, in the written statement but the objection was taken at the settlement of issues before trial, it was given effect to on second appeal (1) The power given to the Court to return a plaint was only discretionary, and if it was shown that the form of a suit was bad, by reason that there has been misjoinder of parties, or of causes of action, it could not be said that a party was precluded from raising the objection and taking it at the hearing of the sint or on appeal. There was nothing to warrant the proposition that when a Court of first instance decided a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiffs, there was an end of the matter, and that the defendant was precluded from raising the question in appeal (2) Where such a question has been raised, the Appellate Court has allowed a suit or claim to be withdrawn (5) Where the appeal has proceeded, the question has been raised in some eases whether the Appeal Court was precluded from reversing a decision on the ground of misjoinder, by reason of seet 578 of the former Code In some cases, misjoinder of causes of action has been considered an irregularity not affecting jurisdiction or the ments of the ease (4) In other eases it has been held that, assuming but not deciding that misjoinder was a more irregularity, it did affect the merits (5) In other cases it appears to have been held that misjoinder of causes of action was of the nature not of an irregularity but an illegality (6) The law upon the point Where, however, this was not so, and particularly where no objection had been taken (a circumstance in itself indicating that the party has not suffered disadvantage), the Court would probably have acted rightly in not dismissing the suit upon what, in the supposed circum stances would be a technical objection. Where effect was given to the objection, the Appellato Court, in the under mentioned case, (2) did not dismiss the suit, but rejected the plaint, directing the plaintiff to pay the costs through out. In other cases the Court both in first and second appeal, has dismissed (3) the suit for misjoinder. As to the present Code, nide post.

Origin of rules -These two rules represent with the amendments italicized sect 44 of the last Code which it was stated was not very lappily expressed (1) R 4 is taken from English O 18 r 2 the words or to obtain a declaration of title to triviocable property in the former section were

Objections for misjoinder - Under sect 51 (d) of the last Code, the plaint might have been rejected in ease of failure to amend, on its being returned for the purpose under sect 53 of the same Code (3) If the Court, instead of rejecting the plaint or returning it for amendment, proceeded to trial, it should . not, it was held, subsequently dismiss the suit for misjoinder, but dispose of it on the merits (i) The objection being of a dilatory character, and beside the merits, must have been taken in the Court of first instance, if not, it was deemed waived (5) It was not allowed to be taken for the first time on appeal, and where it was raised for the first time on appeal, the High Court, on second appeal declined to entertain it (6) A successful objection for misjoinder is a cause for which time may be deducted under sect 14 of the Limitation Act (7) Sect 54 is now O VII r 11, hut clause (d) has not been re enacted See now O VI r 18

Leave -It will be observed that leave can only be applied for in the ease of 1 1 R 5 is absolute Application should be made before the plaint is filed, though possibly, on good reason shown, leave may be given afterwards (8) A plaintiff may, with the leave of the Court, join causes of action, but he is nowhere compelled to do so (9) And even in regard to the excepted causes of action which may be joined, the exception implies only a permission of joinder but does not render it obligators (10) Where leave is applied for, the question whether it will be granted must depend upon convenience and the eircumstances of the case Amongst these, the Court will consider the connection between the claims sought to he joined So leave has been given to join where it was sought to recover immoveable and moveable property comprised in the same instrument, and to join claims in respect of personal and real estate, where both estates rested on a common gift in the same will (11) No appeal lay from an order rejecting an application for leave, but where the effect of the order was to reject the plaint it was held that the order was a deerce, and, as such, appealable (12)

are two or more various causes of action, one of which is to recover immoveable property Several causes of action to recover immoveable property may be loined The rule does not probibit this, but a joinder with such causes of action of a different character, except as excepted in the rule (1) If, however, the Court considers it madvisable to try the several causes of netion in one suit, it can order separate trials (2) There is nothing, moreover, irregular in seeking to recover in one suit immoveable and moveable property if the cause of action is the same in respect of both (3) These decisions appear to be embedied in the new clause (c) And even a claim for possession of certain immoveable property, based on the first paragraph of sect 2 of the Specific Rehef Act, may it has been held, be joined without leave, with a clum for title to that property, and for damages for dispossession from it (1) Claims which do not amount to a new cause of action, but which are mere machinery, such as a prayer for an injunction or receiver, may be joined without leave (5) But it has been held that an injunction cannot be asked for where it was not merely ancillary to the claim for possession (6)

"Suit for the recovery of immoveable property"-The expression " sunt for the recovery of immoreoble property," which is that used in sect 16, is more limited than the expression " suit for immoreable property " or ' for land " within the meaning of the Charter A suit may be one "for land ' within the meaning of the latter, and not within this rule (7) So it has been held that a claim for specific performance of an agreement to soll a share in a house might be joined with a claim on a promissory note (8) So, again, a suit for recovery of a mortgage debt with an alternative prayer for sale, has been held not a suit for recovery of immoveable property (9) Wilson, J said (10) "It seems to me that a suit for 'the recovery of immoveable properly' is a suit founded upon an existing title in which the plaintiff seeks to get possession of the property itself The words 'to obtain a declaration' etc, seem to me to apply to a case where a title exists, and the plaintiff asks to have that fact declared, not to a case where he seeks to have something done, which, when done will give him a title" Immoveable property in this rule includes a right of way (11)

Court, said "Now, when can it be said that a claim is made by "an heir as such '? Plainly, such a claim is made when the plaintiff rests his claim entirely on the allegation that he is the heir of another, and, as such, asserts a right against the defendant" So where a portion of a claim was founded upon the plaintiff s alleged right as heir of A, and another part of the claim had no reference to A's estate, it was held that there was a misjoinder, and that one of the claims must be struck out (1) The Allahabad High Court has, however, dissented from this decision, holding that the heir referred to in the rule is an heir suing or being sued in his representative capacity, who, like an executor or adminis trator, represents the estate of a deceased person, and that it is impossible to hold that the rule precludes a person from joining a claim for property acquired by himself, with a claim for property inherited by him from another, when he does not represent persons other than himself (2) And more recently Jenkins, CJ, explained the meaning of the rule to be as follows Those to whom it relates have the common characteristic that they owe their legal condition to the death of another But there are others of whom this can be predicated as for instance legatees or next of Lin who are not named in the rule Executors administrators, and heirs have this characteristic in common not shared by legatees and next of kin, namely, that not only do they acquire title from the deceased, but they may represent him (3) And in a recent case in the Bombay High Court it was held that a claim for maintenance by the widow of a Mitakshara coparcener was not against the estate of her deceased husband (since his interest was extinguished by his death), but was against the property of which he was a coparcener, and therefore there was no misjoinder when she sued the surviving copareeners for her stridhan property and also for maintenance out of the joint estate (4) in bankriptey, the plaintiff may without leave, but subject to juke 8, 9, join in one action, not several actions, but several "causes of action (1) which term has been held to comprise every fact which is material to be proved to enable the plaintiff to sneeced, (2) the entire set of facts which give rise to an enforceable claim, every fact which, if traversed, the plaintiff must prove in order to obtain judgment,(3) so connected that, is regards evidence, etc., they can conveniently be disposed of together (4) But this joinder is "always subject to the underlying principle that the burden lies on the plaintiff of proving his case, and that no extra burden should he imposed on the defeudant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of dispute "(5)

Order for separation -The Court might, under the terms of sect 45 of the last Code, order separate trials of any "such causes of action -that is causes of action which might have been joined in the same suit under the first p gragraph of that section The second paragraph, therefore, had no application in cases of missonder of causes of action forhidden by the first paragraph, is to which the only course open to the Court was that of returning the plaint for amendment, or rejecting it if not amended, or dismissing the sunt (ride aute) (6) Under seet 45 the Court could, suo motion or on the application of the party, order separate trials. This can be done now under this rule which consolidates the provisions of the second paragraph of sect 15. and of sects 16, 47 of the last Code The power given did not, it was held extend to an order for the dismissal of defendants, and that a fresh suit should be brought against them. Such an order would not be one for the "separate disposal" (or separate trial) of the several causes of action, it would be an order preventing the disposal of them in the suit before the Court If the Court found that the separate causes of action could not be conveniently tried together, it should, it was held, deal with them separately as suh suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring (7) So m a suit on title in which the recovery of immoveable property and mesne profits are claimed, the Court may order separate trials in respect of the claim for the recovery of the immoveable property, and in respect of the el um for mesne profits (8)

A direction to file separate plaints did not, it was held come within the scope of the section which did not require the plaintiff to file separate plaints, but provided for the separate trial of the several causes of action contained in the one plaint, filed on the institution of a suit (9). order which the Court might make was one for separation, and that only in the case where joinder was not forbidden. In the under-mentioned case,(1) however, the Court appeared to consider that even if two causes of action had been combined in the suit, it had power under sect 45 of the last Code and would be justified in allowing two causes of action to be united in the ease, masmuch as it was convenient that the matter should be disposed of in one suit rather than two The power, however, which was given by that section was to order saparation, and a definite provision of law cannot be evaded on the graund of convenience (2) In an earlier case in which the Judge stated that, evidence having been gone into, he preferred trying each cause of action against each defendant separately, instead of rejecting the plaint on the ground of musioinder, it was pointed out that he had misconceived the extent of his powers in the matter in considering the matter one simply of convenience, and that if he were dispased to try the causes of action against all the defendants in one suit, he was at liberty to do so (3) Nor again, of course, cauld the Caurt, where there had been a musianuder, even though no inconvenience might have resulted to the defendants, pass a separate decree ignust each of them (1) An Appellate Court had power, apparently, to arder separate trials (5) Except where the parties agreed, the order could only be made before the first hearing (6) There is no such express limitation now, but doubtless the same rule will be endinarily fellowed

Order confining suit .- Sects 46 and 47 of the last Cade dealt with a different order from that in the second paragraph of sect 45 Under the latter motion, the Court dealt with the causes of action separately as sub-The farmer, however, enribled a defendant, who was embarrassed by the form of the suit to get the trial confined to a reasonable aggregate of cannon of action and in such a case the other causes must needs be left ever for another and (7) This provision, as the other, assumed that the causes of action might be legally joined, though such joinder might be inconvenient, in which case a defoudant night apply or the Court night act. It did not apply whata there was unspounder. It applied where there were several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendant jaintly A case where reparate causes of action were alleged against two defendants did not come within the rule (4) In sect 16, as m sect 15 of the last Code, the world " before the first hearing" were held to be imperative (9) Order XVIII into 9 of the Judicature Acts (10) allows such amendment as may be

The present rule does not expressly refer to orders confining sints but the present rule does not expressly refer to orders confining sints but the from the use of the word "deposed" and the authority given to the Court "to make such other order as may be expedient," which would include such an order confining the suit as was referred to in sects 45 and 47 of the last Code, which this rule is intended to replace

Consolidation of suits -The rule deals with the separate trial of causes of action united in one suit. Neither does it, nor does any other section of the Code, provide for the consolidation of several suits Com solidation in a ho ordered by consent of parties (4) And where the parties do not a ree, consolidation is sometimes ordered by the Court as a matter of expediency (5) on general principles of equity and justice. So where the parties to the suit sought to be consolidated were the same and the subject matter of the suits also was the same, the Court made an order for con schdation (b) Where, on the other hand the parties and the subject matter were different, cousohdation was refused (7) And three suits were held to have been improperly tried together, where, from the very nature of the case the evidence in each suit had to be given separately (8) In the Falls of Ettrick.(9) an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of three salvage actions was refused, as the promovent resisted it on the ground that the several claims were based upon different circumstances and were in themselves conflicting. Sale, J. observing that there being no general or special rules for the consolidation of actions, the only course left in the case was to follow the analogy of the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England The order for consolidation may be obtained either by a plaintiff (10) or order which the Court might make was one for separation, and that only in the case where joinder was not forbidden. In the under mentioned case,(1) however, the Court appeared to consider that even if two causes of action had been combined in the suit, it had power under sect 45 of the last Code and would be justified in allowing two causes of action to be united in the case, masmuch as it was convenient that the matter should be disposed of in one suit rather than two The power, however, which was given by that section was to order separation, and a definite provision of law cannot be evaded on the ground of convenience (2) In an earlier case in which the Judge stated that, evidence having been gone into, he preferred trying each cause of action against each defendant separately, instead of rejecting the plaint on the ground of musjoinder, it was pointed out that he had imsconceived the extent of his powers in the matter in considering the matter one simply of convenience, and that if he were disposed to try the causes of action against all the defendants in one suit, he was it liberty to do so (3) Nor again, of course, could the Court, where there had been a misjoinder, even though no luconveuienco might have resulted to the defendants, pass a separate decree against each of them (1) An Appellate Court had power, apparently, to order separate trials (5) Except where the parties agreed the order could only be made before the first bearing (6) There is no such express hinitation now, but doubtless the same rule will be ordinarily followed

Order confining suit -Sects 46 and 47 of the last Code dealt with a different order from that in the second paragraph of sect 45 Under the latter section, the Court dealt with the eausos of action separately as sub suits The former, however, enabled a defendant, who was embarrassed by the form of the sut, to get the trial confined to a reasonable aggregate of eauses of action, and in such a case the other causes must needs be left over for another sut (7) This provision as the other, assumed that the causes of action might be legally joined, though such joinder might be inconvenient, in which case a defendant might apply or the Court might act. It did not apply where there was misjoinder It applied where there were several causes of action against the sams defendant or the same defendant jointly A case where separate causes of action were alleged against two defendants did not come within the rule (8) In sect 46, as in sect 45 of the last Code, the words "before the first hearing" were held to be imperative (9) Order XVIII rule 9 of the Judicature Acts (10) allows such amendment as may be

ORDER III.

Recognized Agents and Pleaders.

1. Any appearance, application or act in oi to any Court, is a Appearances, etc., may required or authorized by law to be made oi be in person, by recognized agent or by pleader. where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made oi done by the part, in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person

"Appearance"-These words ("appear" and "act") have a well defined and well known meaning To appear for a chent in Court is to be present and to represent him in the various stages of the litigation at which it is necessary that the chent should be present in Court himself, or by some representative (1) There may be appearance if the pleader, though instructed, is not prepared to proceed with the case (2) Under the last Code it was held that where, on the day fixed for hearing, a party was present in person merely for the purpose of applying for an adjournment, which was refused be must be taken to have "appeared 'within the meaning of Chapter \ II of that Code, the provisions of which are replaced by this and following rules party has appeared in person. The purpose for which he appeared or the action which he took on appearance, are immaterial. But where the party is absent and an application for adjournment is made on his behalf by a pleader who has no other instructions, and whose functions are at an end when the adjournment is refused, in that ease the party had not appeared within the meaning of the Chapter (2) Where the pleader who apphes for an adjournment is accompanied hy a recognized agent of the party, but the latter neither makes any application, nor does any act, the question is whether he intends to appear and in fact, does appear for the party in the exercise of his powers under this rule

This rule is merely permissive and enabling. If the recognized agent although able to do so, does not think proper to conduct the case on behalf of his principal, his mere presence in Court is not an "appearance" in the suit. An appearance may be made by a pleader or a recognized agent, but the concurrence of the pleader or ngent is essential. As soon as he ceases to intend to represent the principal, the latter is unrepresented (1) The words in the last Code after "party" were "to a suit or appeal." These words are now omitted. The section will still apply to appeals as proceedings in suits.

"Act"—"To act for a client in Court is to take on his behalf in the Court, or in the offices of the Court, the necessary steps that must be taken in the course of the hitigation in order that his case may be properly laid before the Court '(2) The word "ext" is, however, taken to refer only to ordinary acts, and thus not to include the instituting or defending of a suit, which a recognized agent cannot do in his own name (3) Nor does a mere power to sue authorize an agent to onter into an agreement with a pleader to pay him more than a reasonable remuneration (4)

"Except where otherwise expressly provided"—This may be either by the Code itself or by any other law for the time being in force. Thus, this rule is expressly made subject to O XXXIII r 3 in respect of appheations to eue in forma pauperis (5). Again, clause 10 of the Charter provides that no persons but advocates, vakils, or attorneys of the High Court shall be allowed to plead or act (6) for any suitor in the High Court. So it has been held that the former section did not authorize a recognized agent to address a High Court as the suitor lunself may do, because that clause forbids that for overy person whatever except advocates and vakils (7) and that an authorized agent could not file a pertition of appeal on the appellate side of the High Court (8). Under the Rules of the High Court an advocato may appear and plead only. He cannot therefore file an appeal in the registrar's office (9)

"Party in person"—Where a barrister or pleader appears before the Court as a hitigant in person, he must not address the Court from the advocate's table or in robes, but from the same place and in the same way as any ordinary member of the public (10)

"By a pleader"—As to the meaning of this term, which includes advocates takils and attorneys see sect 2, ante II a party has more

Power of attorney -As to stamp, see Act I of 1879, clause 50, and vakalatnamahs notes to last rule A person bolding a power may refuse to act on it (1) A warrant of attorney to an attorney of a defendant to receive a plaint confess action, suffer or consent to a judgment or decree, empowers the attorney to accept service and appear for the defendant (2) The pewer must authorize the person "to make and do such appearances," etc. A mere authority to look after a case does not make the donee of the power a receg nized agent eo as to be able to apply to refer a case te arbitration (3) The authority given must be construed with reference to the special purpose for which the power was granted the principal himself could do They mean that the agent can do all that ie necessary for the presecution of the emt in the ordinary way. sister married was held during his absence to be "not resident" at that place (i) In the case cited, Melville, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed that "it may be supposed that the Legislature intended to give the henefit of this provision to all persons, and especially to traders, whose interests might be seriously compromised, if, during their absence frem home and their place of business, they could leave no one behind who could represent them in Court, as well as conduct their husiness." If the principal was resident within the jurisdiction, then the agent was not a recognized agent within the meaning of clause (a) of the former section. An application for execution was not made "in accordance with law" (2) when made by a general attorney of the decree-holder at a time when the latter himself was resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree (3). The Legislature has considered it unnecessary to preserve the limitations above noted, and has made the sub clause general

Certificated mukhtars —A mukhtar was at one time not considered a recognized agent (4) Clause (b) of the former section expressly recognized mukhtars. This clause has been now omitted as innecessary. It is included in sub clause (a), which is general in its terms.

Clause (b) "Persons carrying on trade"—As to "carrying on husiness," see notes to sect 20, ante Tho words "where no other agent is expressly autherized" were, under the Code of 1859, held to imply that the persons so carrying on husiness for or in the names of the parties were purely gomastalis or agents, and not partners (5) This decision, hewever, was subsequently dissented from (6) These latter cases dealt with the point whether service on one partner for his co partner was a good service, which was the case under the provisions of sect 71 of the Code of 1862, and is so under O XXX r 3 (6) of the present Code, but the question is still open as regards other acts, appearances and applications. This section and O V r 13 are to be construed together, being intended to carry out the same scheme of reclet [7]. It would seem that in order to constitute a recognized agent, the husiness carried on by bim should be continuous, and not occasional or desiltory. So a Bombry

ORDER V.

I suc and Service of Summons.

Issue of Summons

I. (1) When a suit has been duly instituted a summons is may be issued to the defendant to appear Summons. and answer the clann on a day to be therein specified.

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plantiff's claim

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been assued under sub rule (1) may appear-(a) in person, or

(b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or

(c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court.

Summons -Instead of the words in the former section (sect 64), " When the plaint has been registered and the copies or concise statements required by sect , S have been filed, ' the present section runs " when a suit has been duly instituted ' The first duty of the Court after the filing of the plaint is [provided that the defendant was abve at that date, for if not, the suit cannot proceed (1)] to summon the defendant, whether he be an adult or not (2) Natural justice requires that before an order is passed against a man he should be heard and a decree against one who has never been summoned is not binding upon him (3) A summons, therefore, is the first of the several writs which are incidental to the proceedings in a suit, as being the official notification to a defendant that he has been sued and should appear in Court and answer the claim (4) Generally, and in the absence of any special rule, the summons should be in the language of the Court, and addressed to the defendant himself and not to his agent. In the first place, the form of the summons should be such as that it can be served, then it should contain such full particulars of the description of the person summoned as will render it unlikely that the person served should mustake his identity. Secondly, the contexts should be such as to acquaint the defendant as to the nature of the clum made against him The title of the suit and the plaintiff's name should be stated, as also the amount and nature of the claim. The Form requires also s statement of the particulars of the claim. What these particulars are has not been judicially determined, but the question is not of much practical importance, as the summons is in every case to he accompanied by a copy of the plaint or of a concise statement of it Forms of summons are given which are to be used with such variation as the circumstances of each case may require, and are a guide as to what a summions should contain. Thirdly, the day of appearance is to be specified in the summons and, according to Form 180 of the Code of 1881, it should have at its foot a memorandum stating hours of attendance at the other Even where there is no express rule to that effect, the hour fixed for appearance or attendance should also be stated, though, considering the language of sect 96 of the last Code, in which the attendance was required on the day fixed in the summons the mention of the exact hour did not appear to he material (1) The words 'to appear refer to appearance under O IX r b, post (2) It is desirable that a summons should contun all that is required, at the same time, formalism is not favoured at present, and it will be sufficient if the summons substantially fulfils its purpose of giving the defendant notice (3) and a purson by appearing and defending may waire all objections arising from want of service or defect in the service of summons (4) I fresh summons is sometimes required. There are no provisions as to the issue of successive summons though the practice as to their issue is recognized in O 1X r 5, par in application for fresh summons to appear should not, however he made until the first has been returned into Court (5) and should generally he supported by grounds showing that it was not by any default of the applicant that the summons was not served (o)

"Signed" and 'sealed"—As to the meaning of the word "signed," see sect 2, ante (7) The Letters Patent for the High Courts and the Acts (8) for laming to the other Civil Courts provide for the use of seals. The seal is but on element of the proof of authenticity and the better view is that its omision as a matter of form rather than of sub fauce as its omission does not prevent than that in which the suit is instituted, and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct

Issue of summons for service -The awarding of process is a judicial act, but its service is ministerial. In this country a summons can be served only through the Court, and there is a complete code of rules relating to the service of summons in all cases It has therefore been contended that parties cannot contract themselves out of the rules prescribed and the contrary rule has not been recognized by the Courts in any case (1) The object of the summens is to notify to the defendant that he is sued and the particulars in regard thereto And in the under mentioned case it was held that a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction was not a nullity merely because of an irregularity in service, the parties being shown to be aware of the suit, which is the whole object of service (2) The Code proceeds upon the assumption that overy Court has a jurisdiction within certain limits separate and distinct from overy other Court, and its provisions are applicable only to Courts possessing such a jurisdiction (3) The Court therefore in this case held that it had not the power to execute its own decree or serve its own process out of the local hinits of its jurisdiction. A special bailiff cannot be sent to execute civil process in foreign territory (4) The effect of the words, " of the defendant resides within the jurisdiction," coupled with the corresponding words in sects 85 and 89 of the former Code, was said to he that a summons could he served directly by an officer of the Court on a person residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court oven if he were present, though it might be casually or incidentally, within the jurisdiction, but that it must in such cases he sent where he ausides, even though it he known that at the time he is not there, but else where Whether such a construction would be accepted was, however, doubtful, the question not having been raised or decided. The general rule elsewhere is different, and a summons may always be served on a defendant if he is within the jurisdiction, even if he has just come there at the time of service, provided that he has done so voluntarily, and not induced to do so hy fraud or false protonces of the plaintiff, or only as a witness (5) In cases of any but the shortest stay, the point is likely to be solved by a liberal interpretation for the purposes of this section of the word "resides ' It has been held that the residence under this rule is the place where a person eats, drinks and sleeps or where his family or servants eat, drink and sleep (6) In the Mofussil the Nazn is the proper officer of the Court to whom under this section the summons is delivered for service It is for him to return the summons to the Court as miserved, and this he does by countersigning the bihff's endorsement (7) No officer can serve a summons beyond the local limits of the exercise of his functions, possibly to principles and general orders prescribed for his guidance. A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission, or a factor or common agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts, is not such an agent (1) Upon the principle embodied in the rule, it was held, prior to its enactment, that service of summons on in igent to whom a ship was consigned was good service on the owner in respect of matters connected with the ship (2) Service unduly made under this rule does not become effectual by reason of the fact of such service being subsequently notined to the parties really interested as defendants (3) Semble -Service duly effected under this rule is effectual without reference to the circum stance of its being or not being communicated to the real defendants (4) An opinion has been expressed that it would be anomalous to hold that, though the C sle requires the appointment of a proper person as guardian to act for a minor generally in the conduct of the case, service of summons on a person other than such person may be sufficient service on the minor. The question was not decided, as the Court held that there was no service of summons under the sections corresponding with either in 11 or 13 of O 1, even assuming that these sections applied to a case in which some of the defendants who are interested in the partnership or business are minors (5)

the service on the adult members of the family, which will not be good unless it is proved that there was no agent empowered to accept the service (1)

"On any adult member," etc.—The person on whom service is made must be both adult and male. The object of this provision is that the copy shall be delivered to some person of the age of discretion who will understand for what purpose such copy is delivered, and will give it to the defendant on his coinning. This is all the more necessary as there is no provision in the Code requiring the officer to inform the person with whom the copy is left of its contents so as to impress upon him the importance of delivering it to the defendant as soon as possible. An adult member will be deemed to reside with the defendant only if the two are bona fide living in commensality, or at least in the same house (2)

16 Where the serving officer delivers of tenders a copy Person served to sign of the summons to the defendant personally, acknowledgment or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons

Acknowledgment—The serving officer under this section which core sponds to sect 54 of the Code of 1859, must either deliver or tender a copy of the summons and obtain an acknowledgment on the original. The mere showing of a summons is not sufficient (3). If the party refuses the acknowledgment then the serving officer should proceed under the next rule (4). A mere refusal to sign a receipt or a summons is not an offence under sect. 173 or sect. 180 of the Penal Code (5).

Procedure when de tendant or his agent or such other person as aforesard refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer after using service, or cannot be to accept service of the summons on his behalf, not any other person on whom service can be made, the serving office shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally norks for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was lessed, with a report endorsed thereon or amoved thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed.

Refusal to accept service.—This section, which corresponds with sect 55 of the Code of 1859, and sect 80 of the last Code, has been amended in several particulars. If the defendant himself or other person (that is, agent or manager, or adult male member of his family) he found, but the defendant or such person refuses to sign, then the serving officer may at once affix the summons on the dwelling-house

It was not clear from the language of the section as it stood what results should follow when the defendant retained the copy of summons delivered but refused to sign the acknowledgment. Similarly, if the defendant refused to sign the acknowledgment, but did not "ordinarly" reside in any house, as in the case of roving traders and strolling players, no provision appeared to exist. In such a case it was considered that the refusal should operate as service and the following provise was inserted in the draft—"Provided that, where the defendant or his agent or such other person as oforesoil refuses to sign the acknowledgment, and (a) retains the copy of the summons delivered to him, or (b) no house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for goin can be discovered, the Court may direct that the summons shall be deemed to have been duly served. The proposal has, however, not been adopted

"Cannot find "-But if the defendant cannot be found, then the return must show that there is no egent or other person on whom the service could he made before a service on the dwelling house is good. The words "cannot find " constitute a condition of the mode of service provided (1) Thus where the summons was served on the defendant's paternal uncle, who was a member of the same joint family and lived in the same house, it was held that the service was insufficient since there was no proof that defendant could not be found (2) It must be shown that proper efforts to find the defendant were made, as for instance that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect the defendant would be found (3) is true that you may go to a man's house and not find hun, but that is not attempting to find him, you should go to his house, make inquiries and if necessary, follow him You should make inquiries to find out when he is likely to be at home and go to the house at a time when he can be found (4) The summons can be affixed to the dwelling house only if the defendant could not be found after ddigent search and reasonable efforts made to find him (5). there was no attempt to find the defendants, and there being only one summons for a number of defendants, it was affixed to the house of one only, it was held not duly served, even on that defendant (1) The rule has been amended to embody these rulings to the effect that the serving officer must use diligence. If, though the defendant is absent, the serving officer is told where he is, service on the house is bid, (2) the Court observing, in the last ented case, that mere temporary absence of the person to be served does not justify the process server affixing the summone to the door. But where the serving officer has information that there is no prospect of his being able to servo the defendant personally within a reasonable time, he is not bound to wait, and will be justified in affixing the summions on the door (3) A defendant will also be held not to be found when it is known that he is in the house, but the serving officer cannot get access to him (4) Whether or not the conditions required by the rule are established to the satisfaction of the Court, must, of course, in each case depend on its own particular circumstances (5) What has to be regarded in all such cases is this, that the object of the ecryice of a summous, in whatever way it may be effected, is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the enit in due time before the day fixed for the hearing, and when, from the return of the serving officer, it appears that there is no likelihood that the summons will come to the defendant's knowledge in due time, or a probability that it will not so come to his knowledge, it cannot be said that there has been due service (6)

"Outer door" -The words "or some other conspicuous part" have been added, as in this country many houses have nothing which, without a etretch of language, can be described as " outer doors "

"Ordinarily resides"-As to the meaning of the term "resides," see sect 20, ante The intention of the provision is that the defendant ebould be residing in the house in such a manner as to make it probable that a knowledge of the service of cummons will reach him Thus, the service will not be good if the defendant have left the house and the village two years before (7) The rule speaks of the house where the defendant resides Therefore place of business would not ordinarily come within the section, (8) though in some cases, where the defendant both resides and carries on business at the same place, it would be so There must be evidence that the house on which the summons was affixed was that in which the defendant ordinarily resided (9) It has been held that in this rule and rule 9 of this Order a person must be taken to reside where he or his family or ecryants eat, drink and sleep (10)

"Or carries on business," etc.—These words have been added to bring this rule into closer conformity with seet 20, the principle of which it was considered was equally applicable to the service of process (1)

Return—The return should specify that the copy was affixed to "the outer door (or, now, conspicuous part) of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides;" and merely to report that it has been affixed to the defendant's house is not su licent, as the defendant may have more than one house (2). In a subsequent case (3) the service was held good, as the serving peon deposed that the defendant was living in the house. But where the return does not say that the copy has been affixed, nor does that appear from the inquiry made under r 19, there is no service (4). So also the return must state that the summons was affixed to the house in which the defendant ordinarily resided at the time of the service, (5) and where the reference to the time lind heen omitted, the return was considered insufficient (6). The summons was tendered to the defendant and returned, and that the defendant refused to receive the stine, whereupon the serving officer informed him what the document was, and acquainted him with the nature and contents thereof (7)

Identification —As the practice of the Courts with regard to identifying persons or houses in connection with the service of process did not appear to lumform, it was considered expedient to provide in the return endorsed on the summons for, at least, one identifier whom the Court or the parties could call as a witness in case of a dispute with respect to the sufficiency of service. The words "if any" were, lowever, inserted hecause it was considered that the Code should not render absolutely illegal the service of process without an identifier, where local experience justified the High Court in issuing no directions for such a safeguard

18. The serving officer shall, in all eases in which the is summons has been served under rule 16, and manner of service endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons.

Return not evidence of service —This section corresponds to sect 56 of the Code of 1859 The return is not legal evidence of the service (8)

Whonever it is necessary for the Court to satisfy itself that a summons or other process has been duly served, the presiding officer should for that purpose take the evidence of the serving officer Thus, in Raj Kishore v Bydonath Shaha,(1) Bayley, J, observed that "there is simply a return by the Nazir to the effect that the peon swears that such a notice had been served on the defendants; but a bare return like this, without the deposition on oath of the serving peon taken before a competent authority, which the Nazir is not, is wholly insufficient in law to prove the service" The general rules of the Calcutta High Court (2) lay down that the requisite proof may he either by the affidavit or verified statement of the person by whom the service was effected, and of any person who may have accompanied the serving officer for the purpose of identifying the party to whom the process was addressed, or otherwise directing or assisting the serving officer, or, if deemed necessary, by the examination in Court as witnesses of such persons as the Court may think fit to examine As to the added words, see notes to last rulo

Where a summous is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been Examination of servverified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit, and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thunks fit

"Shall either declare"-These words show that the affixing, tiken hy itself, is certainly not effectual complete service. The Court has to see that the conditions precedent to such service have been fulfilled Service is insufficient until confirmed under this rule. If the Court decides against the service, then either a new summons must be issued or substituted service directed (3)

(1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out Substituted service of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the simmons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some eonspicious put of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have

Substituted service -This form of service can only be had in cases in which (if there were no difficulties in the way) personal service could be had This is based on the principle that one cannot do indirectly what cannot be done directly. So the defendant must be a person or a corporation or a firm (1) So, as the Courts have no jurisdiction over a foreign sovereign unless he submits, he cannot be served by substitution (2) If at the time of the issue of summons there could have been at law personal service of it upon the defendant sought to be served, then substituted service may be allowed (3) But if personal service could not at law have been made, then, save as heremafter mentioned substituted service cannot be ordered (1) Assuming that personal service at la e could have been made, the grounds of fact on which service may be ordered are (o) that the defendant is keeping out of the way, or (b) that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way. In cases of substituted service the Courts should take care to be satisfied that the con ditions on which alone it is good exist (5) It has been already stated that, as a general rule, substituted service cannot be ordered where personal service is not legally possible, but under ground (a) it can, it has been held be directed where the defendant was out of the jurisdiction at the time of thousand of the writ if the evidence satisfies the Court that he went out of the jurisdiction to evade service (6) As regards ground (b) the section gives full discretion to the Court So service has been allowed on proof that the defendant could not be found that he had not been heard of for over two years and that his uncle and father did not know where he was (7)

Court to which process must be sent -See sect 59 of Code of 1859 R 21 shortens the earlier portion of sect 85 of the last Code, the second clause of which is r 23 R 22 is seet 86 The summons, it was ruled, should ordinarily be sent, not to the Judge of the district where it has to be served, but to the Court having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant resides, hy which it can be conveniently served—that is, to the Munsif within whose jurisdiction the defendant resides (1) But the Calcutta High Court summons used to be sent to the District Court for service through the local Court by direction of the District Judge, and the same rule applies in the Panjab Chief Court (2) For forms of process, see Schedule I, Appendix B says to any Court " not being a High Court Should, however, the summons be sent in contravention of this rule, the High Court might either return it or order the proper local Court to effect service. This will, however, not be done for a foreign Court When suits are instituted in England against persons resident in India the assistance of the Courts here is not invoked Court, through the plaintiff's soheitor, sends the writ to a solicitor in India with instructions to serve and to return writ with an affidavit of service the Calcutta High Court refused to serve a summons sent to it by a Court in the Nizam of Hyderabad's territories, advising that it should he sent to a pleader practising in the district where the defendant resided (3) The summons is to be returned together with the record which will include the Nazir's return, affidavits statements, and depositions of the serving officer and of the witnesses relative to the facts of service. As to the necessity of a declaration of sufficiency of service, vide ante

Presumption as to validity of service -According to the opinion of Scott, J, if the return prima facic shows that service his been duly effected, the presumption in favour of the correctness of the proceedings of the Courts will prevail, and the Court sending the summons is not bound in every case to satisfy itself that the law is to service has been strictly followed. The Court serving the summens alone can judge how in any particular case service should be effected, and whether it has been properly effected, and it does not appear to have been intended by the Legislature that the transmitting Court should act as a revising Court as regards the service. In fact, it would only lead to great inconvenience and delay, without effecting any real good for that Court to discuss the discretion of the Court serving the summons as to what facts are sufficient to justify the warver of personal service on the defeudant, and the substitution of an affixing of the summons on his dwelling house, or the adoption of other mode of substituted service For instance, where a Court has returned a summons as duly served, and the return states that the summons has been posted on the defendant's dwelling house, because the defendant has gone elsewhere, it ought to be presumed that this service was justified by the facts, and that the Court duly acted under the provisions of sects 80 and 82 read together (now rr 17, 19) But, at the same time, the presumption in favour of the due execution of acts of a judicial nature only obtains donec probetur in contrarium, and there may now and then occur cases where there is something in the return distinctly negativing that presumption, and showing illegality in the mode of service (1) Probably, however the true rule is that the transmitting Court may accept but is not bound by the return, the section not requiring any declaration touching the sufficiency of the service (2) In this view it devolves upon the transmitting Court to determine upon the sufficiency of the service before trying the suit, raising or not raising the presumption according to the circumstances The practice of the Calcutta High Court has always been to determine for itself whether the service is sufficient having regard to the numerous irregularities which exist in "Mofussil service ' But the Allahabad High Court has held that usually the decision whether such summons has been properly served or not rests with the serving Court not with the issuing Court (3)

24 Where the defendant is confined in a prison, the summons services on detendant shall be delivered or sent by post of otherwise in prison to the officer in charge of the prison for scruce on the defendant

Defendant in jail—A suiter ought obviously not to be deprived of his remedy by the fact that the defendant is in jail (4). The former section (as to which, see sect 15. Let \(\nabla \) of 1869) was originally consider the obviously felt in the last mentioned case. Wilson J is reported to have held that the indorsament under sect S7 of the last Code ranked lagher than a nairs return ind was evidence of the service of summons (5). The intended section contains no provision as regards the return of service, which is dealt with by r. 29 under which the return is evidence of due service.

25. Where the defendant resides out of British India and has no agent in British India empowered to accept service, the summons shall be ad dressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing and sent to him by post, if there is postal communication between such place and the place where the Court is situate

"Resides out of British India "-In such cases the mode of service is necessarily of a private character, as it is a general rule that a Court has no authority to send its process for execution out of the territorial limits of the State So a builiff cannot be sent to foreign territory to himself serve the summons on the defendant there (1) 1 bis rule, which corresponds with sect 60 of the Code of 1859, must be read with the next

"Sent", "Forwarded"-The section in the last Code required that the aumnions should be "forwarded" to the defendent, which was held to me in that the summons must reach hun (2) This, therefore did not mean merch put into the post (3) and there had to be proof of facts from which the Court might it isomably conclude that the summons had reached the defendant (4) In some court to would amount to a denial of justice to require direct proof of accept or refusal. When proof of posting in due course has been given a presumption may but used mader sects 16 and 111 of the Evidence Act This would appear to be the case now The word "sent has been substituted But there ought to be evalence that he is, or has been recently residing at the place to which the summons has been sent, or that the acknowledgment is in the writing of the defendant (5) In practice the summons is sent under registered cover, both to cusing service as well as to procure good evidence of it (6) If a registered cover is refused, the person so refusing emmot take advantage of his refusal and ple ul ignoranco of its contents (7)

been established or continued, with power to serve a summons issued by a Court under this Code in any foreign territory in which the defendant resides, or

(b) the Gorrior General in Council has, by notyfication in the Gazette of India, declared that any summons so issued may be served by any Court situate in any such territory and not established or continued in the exercise of any such invisitation as aforesaid.

the summons may be sent to such Political Agent or Court, by post or otherwise, for the purpose of being served upon the defendant; and, if the Political Agent or Court returns the summons with an endorsement signed by such Political Agent or by the Judge or other officer of the Court that the summons has been served on the defendant in manner hereinbefore directed such endorsement shall be deemed to be evidence of service.

Summons outside India.-This section replaces sect '90 of the last Code which was itself substituted for the original by the Amendment Act (VII of 1888), sect 12, and is intended charly for Indian Native States. This section does not apply to British or other territories, not under or connected with the Indian Government - such as Ceylon, the Straits Scittements, and even Great Britain, and, à fortion, not to countries like China and Persia, where there is a British Envoy or Ambassador or Consul, as distinguished from a Political Agent, nor to Afghanistan. The general direction contained in r 25 would apply in all such cases Summonses issued for scryice on persons residing in British possessions out of British India, and in other countries to which this rule does not apply, should be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing, and sent by post in accordance with that section (1) The distinction between the cases in which this rule applies and in which it does not apply is to be preserved, as the agency of the post office under r 25 should not be used for the service of a summons except when specially prescribed, for when any other mode for serving a notice is prescribed, a service through the post has not been deemed sufficient, even though actual delivery of the notice by the post peon is proved (2)

Endorsement is evidence — Unlike the ordinary return, the endorseneut under the signature of Political Agent, Judge, or other officer is evidence of the service of the summons, but it is no longer, as under the section prior to its amendment in 1888 conclusive evidence, and the defendant may accordingly prove that notwithstanding the endorsement as to the service, the summons was not served

"Sent."—In the under mentioned case (1) it was held that the Sub ordinate Judge should have sent the summons himself, instead of through the Court of the District Judge

27. Where the defendant is a public officer (not belonging to His Magesty's military or natal forces or officer or on servant of this Magesty's Indian Marine Service), or is always company or local authority or a railway company or local authority, the Court may, if it appears to it that the summons may be most conveniently so served, send it for service on the defendant to the head of the office m which he is employed, together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Service on public officers—The exigencies of public service demand that both civil and mulitary officers should not be summoned without proper notice to their superiors. This concession, however, coupled with the privileges given in connection with attachment, casts upon the Govern ment a corresponding duty to provide commensurate facilities for service. This section, which replaces sect 422, extends its provisions, which had hitherto applied to public officers only, to railway servants or servants of local authorities. Whittary officers are de 'R with in the next section. If the summons is not sent to the head of the office it must be served in the usual way. The Covernment pleader is not the agent of every public officer as he is of Government, to accept service. As to the duty of the Head of the office, service, and return, see r. 29, post

28. Where the defendant is a soldier, the Court shall send the summons for service to his commanding officer together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Soldiers—The words "an officer or" formerly occurring in sect 468 of the last Code before the words "a soldier" were repealed by the Cantonments Act (XIII of 1889) Military officers therefore same that let ceased to be governed by act 468, the provisions of which are embodied in this section so far as they relate to soldiers. Owing to the varied conditions of service of military officers, it has been thought expedient to follow the terms of the Cintonment.

Service—With a general application so much of sect 468 of the last Codo has been retained as compels the officer addressed by the Court to execute tha process (1) Special provision has been made on the lines of sect 72 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code 1898 for treating a return in such a case as evidence though unsupported by affidavit (2). It has also been considered desirable to declare such a return to be evidence of non service also so as to avoid the necessity for summoning public officers where as not infrequently occurs, an exparte decree has been passed by inadvertence and is assailed by an application under 0.1 \(\text{ } \) 1 \(\text{ } \) 1 \(\text{ } \) 1 or defendant, as the case may be; and, subject thereto, an arement of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleading.

- 7. No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, russe any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

- 8. Where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial penial of contract of the same by the opposite party shall be constituted only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract
- 9. Wherever the contents of any document are material, it effect of document shall be sufficient in any pleading to state the coffect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part their coff are material
- 10. Wherever at is material to allege malice, fraudulent intertion, knowledge or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without selting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred.
- 11. Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, are material
- 12. Whenever any contract or any relation between any implied contract, or persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances villout setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.

13. Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his facour or as to which the burden of proof hes upon the other ade unless the same has first been specifically denied, (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff suce only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

Pleadings .- Rules I-13, 16-18 of this Order are new, and rules 2-13 and 10 are taken from the English O 19, rr 1 7, 11, 16, 20 25, 37, respectively Rules 11 and 15 represent sects 51 and 52 of the list Code Rule 17 is taken from O 29, r 1 of the English rules, and would appear to hold the place of roct 53 of the last Code after clause (a) of that section, which is now embodied in O VII r 11 of this Code Hule 18 is taken from O 28, r 7 of the linglish rules and would appear to replace sect 51 (d) of the last Code Other rules from the English O 19 are tu be found in O VIII, port As regards this Order the Special Commutee stated, "In our opinion it is most necessary that hitigants in this country should come tu trial with all assuce clearly defined, and that cases should not be expended or grounds shifted without reference to the true ficts. For this purpose we think that the present system of pleadings in the Mofusul which is notoriously by should be improved. and we have incorporated in the rules an order on pleadings which it is lioped will lead to sounder and furer methods of arriving at the real points in dispute The forms have been revised, and we hope that they will be brought into more general use in the Mofusul. The Committee have added a few rules relating to pleidings based upon the system of pleading introduced by the Judicature Acts in England, which is generally admitted to be the best form of pleading in civil suits. In this country, outside the Presidency towns, the pleadings are seldom artistically drawn They are neither coneiso nor precise, but contain varue and general statements from which it is difficult to ascertain definitely the real question in controversy between the parties. The sole object of pleadings is thus frequently defeated, the issue is enlarged, the trial is delayed and much unnecessary expense incurred by the parties, who are also hable to be taken by surprise. They have further provided that the forms in the Schedule shall, when applicable, he used for ill pleadings, and when they are not applicable, forms of the like character shall be used The rules prescribed will not prevent the pleader from exercising his discretion, for the amount of detail must necessarily vary with the nature of each suit It is, however, made clear that these must be particularly suffi cient to apprise the Court and the other party of the exact nature of the questions to be tried The Committee have also given a party who considers that his opponent's pleading does not give him the information to which he is entitled the right to apply for further particulars so as to enable him to know what case he has to meet at the trial They have, however, endeavoured to modify the rigour of the rules by providing in accordance with sect 55 of the Indian Evidence Act that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific demal, require any fact to be proved by the party who rehes upon it "

The subject of pleading will be found further discussed in the notes to O VII rr 1-6, but some observations summarized from the English "Annual Practico" may be here made

Rules 2 and 3 —The point of rules 2 and 3 is that pleadings are now mere statements of facts not law, of material facts only, and of facts which are not evidence stated in a summary way after, as nearly as possible, the forms of pleading given in the Schedules The written statement must be as hief as possible, but should contain a full and true narrative (1) framed with care, so as to dispense with undue statements at the settlement of issues,(2) and should be confined to relevant facts, (3) anything in the nature of argument (4) or evidence or conclusions of law to be drawn from the facts pleaded being is admissible (5) The whole object of pleading is that the parties and the Court should know what is the real point to be discussed and decided,(6) and it should be framed with reference to this object

Rules 4 and 5 -Rules 4 and 5 deal with particularity In every pleading a certain amount of detail is necessary to ensure clearness and to prevent the other party from being taken by surprise Pleadings are of no use unless they define clearly the questions at issue between the parties, and for this purpose cach party must state his case with precision, otherwise the issue would be "enlarged," as it is called, and neither party would know for certain what was the real point to be discussed and assured at the trial, and therefore would not be able to properly prepare his evidence for it No precise rule can, however, be laid down as to the decree of particularity which is required As rule 4 directs the statement of particulars, so rule 5 provides a remedy in case the imperative languago of the former rule is overlooked or disobeyed. If the allegations contained in any pleading are too vague, the proper course is to apply by notice and ask for fuller particulars Each party is entitled to obtain a fair outline of his opponent's case, but cannot compel him to disclose the evidence hy which he will attempt to establish that caso Nor will the Court sauction any attempt to deliver interrogatories under the guise of seeking particulars The object of particulars is to enable the party asking for them to know whit case he has to meet at the trial, and so to save unuecessary expense and avoid allowing parties being taken by surprise On such an application the notice or summons should ask that if the particulars ordered be not delivered within the time prescribed, the allegations complained of be struck out, or that the party in fault be precluded from giving any evidence in support of it at the trial Tho words "upon such terms" in the English rule corresponding to rule 5 have been held to authorize an order that if proper particulars he not delivered within a certain time the action shall stan I dismised or be stayed (I) Leave may be given to amen I or to add to particulars given

Rule 6 -Cases constantly occur in which, although everything has has pened which would at common law prima focie entitle n man to a certain sum of money, or vest in him a certain right of action, there is yet something in ite which must be done, or something more which must happen, in the par ticular case, before he is entitled to sue, either by reason of the provisious of some Statute, or because the parties have expressly so agreed, this some thing m re is called a condition a recedent. It is not of the essence of such n cause of action, but it has been made essential. It is an additional formality superimposed on Common Law. Hence in Lingland the plaintiff could draft n perfectly good statement of claim without making any reference to the con dition i recedent But this till 1875, he was not allowed to do In former days the claimfull was required to set out in his declaration every condition precedent and to aver the due performance of it with all particularity came the Common Law Procedure 1ct, 1852 sect 57 of which provided shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant in any action to aver performance of conditions precedent generally, and the opposite party shall not deny such exerment senerally, but shall specify in his pleading the condition or conditions recedent the extformanco of which he intends to contest ' And now (O 19, r 11 of the 1 milesh rules) the plantiff need say nothing about any condition recedent which has been performed. This provision is reproduced in rulo 6 of this Order. A general average of the due performance of all conditions precedent is implied in every pleading, so it need not be alleged. It is for the defendant if he contends that there was a condition precedent and that it has not been duly performed to state specifically what that condition was, and to plead its non performance otherwise its due performance will be presumed and it is not sufficient for him to allege generally that "an express condition" had been agreed to he must state its terms and between whom it was made, ind whether verbally or in writing Nevertheless when n condition precedent is properly pleaded, the burden of proving its due performance or the waiver of its due performance still rests on the plaintiff

But it is to be noted that an allegation which is of the essence of the caust of action is not a condition precedent within the meaning of this rule and must still be pleaded in the plaint. Thus the Law Merchant requires that notice of dishonour be given to every person who is sought to be made hable on a negotiable instriment except the acceptor. Unless such notice was duly given or was warved or excused no action has against the drawer or any indorsee. Hence the plaint must contain either an allegation that notice of dishonour was given to the defendant or a statement of the facts rehed on as excusing the giving of such notice.

Rule 7 —The meaning of rule 7 is that a party s second pleading must not contradict his first. Thus to illustrate from English practice, if a plaintiff claims rent on his writhe cannot claim the same sum in his reply as damages for unlawfully "holding over Or if the statement of claims alleges merely t negligent breach of trust, the teply must not assert that such breach of trust was fraudulent. Such inconsistent claims should be pleaded if at all, after natively in the statement of claim.

Rule 8—Rule 8 is really a special application of the general principle and down in rule 2 of O VIII, post II the defendant wishes to contend that my contract on which the plaintiff rehes is invalid he must do something more than inerely deny the agreement, he must plead specially by way of confession and avoidance the matters of fact which rendered it invalid A traverse merely denies that the contract was in fact made it leaves unquestioned its sufficiency in law

Rule 9—It may be noted, with reference to rule 9, that in an action of libel the precise words of the document are material. So in some cases the precise words of a will may be material.

Rules 10-12 —Rule 10 and tho two following rules are special applications of the general principle laid down in rule 2 of this Order (which is indeed the fundamental rule of the present English system of pleading), that every pleading shall contain and contain only a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading seles, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved.

- 14. Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleading to be signed pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him 50 sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf
- Vendeation of plead being in force, every pleading shall be venticed ings at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading of the court to be acquainted with the facts of the case

(2) The person verifying shall specify, by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the pleading, what he verifies of his own knowledge and what he verifies upon information received and believed to be true

(3) The verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed.

Subscription—These rules deal with all plandings. Seets 51 and 52 of the last Code dealt with plants and sect. 115 with written statements. The object of the signiture to the plant is to prevent as far as possible disjutes as to whether the suit was instituted with the plantiff's knowledge and authority (1) The rule requires that the plant (as well as written statement) should be subscribed by the party and his pleader, if any But this requirement as to subscription is governed by O III r 1. The act of signature cannot be done by the pleader instead of the plaintiff, because the Code requires both sum stores, but it normits acts to be done by a recognized agent. Reading. therefore, this section with O III r 1, a personal subscription is not imperative in all cases, and a plaint which may be presented by an authorized agent may in like manner be subscribed by him, and such a subscription is a compliance with the rule (2) Where the plaintiffs described themselves as lately carrying on business under the name of "C & Co." it was held that there was no irregularity in its being signed "C & Co" (3) It is not possible to set down entegorically what is good cause (i) within meaning of the provise A person holding a general power of attorney containing inter also nowers to sue and defend smts but not containing a special power to sign a plaint, was held to be a person duly authorized within the meaning of the provise of this section in the last Code, in which the words were "duly authorized by him in this hehalf, that is, to sign New the signature may be that of any one authorized either to sign or to suo or defend (5) The signature of a plaint by an ueauthorized agent, who subsequently becomes ompowered to sign, is sufficient (6) Under the last Code if a plaint was not signed and verified as required, it might have been returned for amendment (7) and rotected if not amended (8) Presumably there is nothing to prevent this heing dene new

The mere fact that the plaint in a sint has not been signed by the plaintiff named therein, or by any person duly authorized by him as required by this rule, will not necessarily make the plaint absolutely void. A defect in the signature of the plaint, or the absence of signature where it appears that the sum was in fact filed with the knowledge and by the authority of the plaintiff named therein, may be waived by the defendant, or, if necessary, cured by amendment at any stage of the suit, and having regard to seet 99, ante, is not a ground for interference in appeal (9)

Verification.—The object of the verification of the plaint is to fix upon the plaintiff the responsibility for the statements which it contains, and to affirm a guarantee of his good faith (10). In other words, if he will not swear that he believes his cause to be just, the law does not care to bother itself with it. But when the adversary comes in, such verification is of no moment. It is not oven evidence. The justice of the cause must then be proved by competent evidence. Like any other formal matter, its absence is waived by a failure to object. And if its entire absence does not affect the jurisdiction, of course mere defects in it cannot (1) It would be difficult to imagine any case in which a defective verification could affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court (2) Under the last Code where a plaint was not verified or improperly verified, it was returned for amendment, and, if not amended, rejected The suit should not, it was held, be dismissed (3) (vide ante) There is no rule that a person named as a co plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint (4) As the object of verification is to secure good faith, and its effect to make the statements in the plant the plaintiff's own, the Courts are bound to see that plaints are properly verified (5) The verification may be by some other person if the latter is acquainted with the facts The permission to a person to verify on be half of the plaintiff should be given in each case individually, and not generally (6) When verification by an agent is once expressly allowed, the Court is not competent afterwards to raise an objection to it (7) But the plaintiff may himself be required to subscribe and verify,(8) as where a plaintiff charges fraud on facts known to him (9) It was held that the verifi cation should be by all the plaintiffs, but that the Court night allow one of them to verify, a co plaintiff coming within the meaning of the words "some other person," etc (10) The amended section now provides for verification by one of the plaintiffs or defendants. This rule does not apply to the case of corporations, which is provided for by O XXIX r 1, post (11) As to the Administrator General, see below (12) In case of a person holding a general power of attorney, or of any other recognized agent, the Court will probably not insist on any extreme stringency of proof as to his acquaintance with the facts of the case (13) A fortion will this he so in the case of a co partner or other co plaintiff. opposite side, but it is not necessary (1) and is certainly not required (2) The substantial portion of the plant consisting of the statement of the claim of the plaintiffs and the prayer, was written upon two slicets of plain paper and verified by the plantiffs Subsequently to the affixing of the plaintiffs' signatures a front sheet, consisting of a piece of stamped paper with the name of the Court and the names and addresses of the parties was added, and the plaint thus composed filed in Court Held, that the verification was defective, but that the suit ought not to have been dismissed. The plaintiffs ought to have been allowed an opportunity of amending the plant by making a proper verification (3) The rule does not require the verification of a plaint to be made in the presence of in other of the Court, but having regard to the necessity of satisfying the Court that the person other than the plaintiff who verifies the plaint is acquainted with the facts of the case, it has in one case been said to be dear able that a verification by such a person should be made in the presence of the Court unless the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient ground for dispensing with his attendance (4) Persons exempted from attendance are not excupted from signature or verification except the Court allows it for good cause and then the party verifying should be one proved to the satisfaction of the Court to I e acquainted with the facts of the case (5) When an application is made for verification by an attornoy it has been said to be desirable though not necessary that notice should be given to the other side (6) If a written statement is admitted on the record without verification the allegations contained in it should be noticed and a sucs framed accordingly (7)

Objections to verification—Objections to verification should be taken before the settlement of issues—after that the case should be disposed of on the merits and not dismissed for insufficient verification (8)

Mode of verification — It was held under the last Code that in all cases whether the plaint is verified by the plaintliff or by some other person the person verifying should state shortly what paragraphs be verifies of his own know ledge, and white paragraphs he believes to be true from the information of others (9). In the first Allahabad case etted a verification in the words "to the limit (or extent) of my knowledge the purport of this is true was hid to be bad, and the Court observed that the verification must be if all the facts are to the knowledge of the deponent a distinct verification that they are to his knowledge true—and that if he has knowledge as to some in I only information and belief as to others the verification should show as to which he speaks from his knowledge and as to which he speaks from his mformation and behef" In the last Allahabad case cited, the ventication was in the following form . "The contents of the petition of plaint are true to the best of my knowledge and behef," and a Full Bench of the Court held that although the verification was not in strict comphance with the Code, it substantially complied with it A failure to distinguish in the pleading between the facts stated on personal knowledge and those stated on information and belief must of necessity defeat to a great extent the object to be attained by verification, unless the person verifying is held to have made every allegation upon personal knowledgo. The rule has now been amended in accordance with these rulings and governs all pleadings. A verification to the effect that the contents of the plaint are substantially true is not sufficient (1) as it con tains a qualification which is a material departure from the requirements of the Code (2) If an attorney, having obtained leave of the Court for that purpose, means to verify the plaint himself, he should sign the verification on his own account, and not as the plaintiff sattorney, but if he means to sign the verification merely as the plaintiff's attorney, the plaintiff himself ought to see the plaint and verification and authorize the attorney to sign the verification for him (3) The General Rules of the North-Western Provinces (4) and Calcutta High Courts (5) provide that all verifications "shall correctly specify the date and place at which they are signed" This rule has now been embodied in the third clause

Course to be taken when verification defective -If the verification of a plaint is discovered to be defective at any time whilst the suit is before the Court of first instance the plaint may be amended by the Court (6) If such defect be not discovered until the suit comes on appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court may, if it thinks fit, return the plaint to the Court of first instance to he amended by it But where the defect is such that it is covered by the provisions of sect 99 ante, there is no necessity for the Appellate Court to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint In any event a defect in the verification of a plaint will not of necessity result in the dismissal of the suit (7) or in its being decreed (8)

The Court may at any stage of the proceedings order to plead be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous ings or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit

language is wide, but its operation has in England been to some extent limited by the decisions given on it Although the rule expressly states that the order may be made " at any stage of the proceedings." still the application should always be made promptly, and as a rule before the close of the pleadings, or the Court may, in its discretion, decline to exercise its jurisdiction (1) that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their cases, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law, and, if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary and it tends to prejudice, emharrass, and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right "(2) A reasonable latitude must be given (3) Not every pleading which offends against the rules will bo struck out The applicant must show that he is in some way preindiced by the pregularity Still, "the defendant may claim ex debito justifies to have the plaintiff's case presented in an intelligible form, so that be may not be embarrassed in meeting it (4)

"Unnecessary."—The word "unnecessary" was introduced into tha Enghsh Rule in 1883. But the mere fact that an opponent's pleading contains some unnecessary matter is not sufficient ground for an application under this rule. A statement will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary, so long as it is otherwise harmless [5]. It is no part of the defendant's duty to reform the plaintiff's pleading or to dictate to bim how be shall plead, or time tersa. But if wholly immaterial matter be set out in such a way that the applicant inust plead to it, and so raise irrelevant issues which may involve expense, trouble and delay, then the irrelevant matter will be struck out, as it will prejudice the fact rule of the action.

"Scandalous"—As regards "scandalous matter, the Court has a general purisdetion to expunge it in any record or proceeding (6) and apparently, according to the English practice, any person may make the application (7) Allegations of dishonesty and outrageous conduct, etc, are not however, seemedalous if relevant to the issue (3) "Nothing can be scandalous which is relevant "(1) "The mere fact that these paragraphs state a scandalous fact does not make them scandalous" (2) But if degrading charges be made which are irrelevant, or if, though the charge be relevant, unnecessary details are given, the pleading becomes scandalous (3) The sole question is whether the matter alleged to be scandalous would be admissible in ovidence to show the truth of any allegation in the pleading which is material with reference to the rehef prayed (4)

"Tend to prejudice, etc."-The Court is "disposed to give a liberal interpretation" to the words "Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit" (5) At the same time parties must not be too ready to find themselves embarrassed If the defondant does not make it clear how much of the plaint he admits and how much he denies, his pleading is embarrassing (6) If he does not make it clear whether he is traversing the allegations contained in the plaint, or objecting to them on a point of law his defence will be struck out as embarrassing (7) In neither case could the plaintiff safely join issue So a plea of justification is embarrassing if it leaves the plaintiff in doubt what the defendant has justified and what he has not (8) But mere probably is not embarrassing (9) Nor will a statement be struck out as embarrassing meiely because the other party declares that it is untrue (10) The mere fact that ? Statement of Claim embraces several causes of action is not, according to English practice, ombarrassing, if they are distinctly pleaded in the alternative A claim for alternative relicf is not embarrassing (11) So any number of meon sistent defences may now, in England, be pleaded to the saure cause of action, and their inconsistency is not "embarrassing to the pleader (12)

But if a claim against executors personally in their private capacity be improperly joined with a claim against the estate of their testator, it will be struck out (13) So whore several plaintiffs or several defendants are improperly joined in one action, though the causes of action he separate the pleading will he struck out (14) Where a pleading is defective only in the sense that it does

Former and present provisions—The present rules are in very much intergeneral terms than sect 53 of the last Code which they replace. Clause (a) of that section delly with rejection of the plaint for want of cruse of action likis provision has now been referred to O VII r 11 Clause (b) dealt with return for amendment under extrain circumstances which are expressly stried (i) (ii) (ii) and (iv) as to which see jost. This return was before the settle ment of issues. Clause (c) dealt with amendment by the Court at any time before judgment. The section also contained the important qualification that no plaint should be amended either by the Court or by the party so as to conveit which of one character made as each of smoother and important character. Before pointing out the extended scope of the present Code, and for the better under stunding off the a detailed examination of the former provisions is given.

Return for amendment by Court of First Instance under former Code—1 pluntift (2) might himself apply at on before attlement of issues that the plant which he had filed be returned to him for amendment if he per coved that it was defective formally or required amendment as regards substance or rehef. An application was generally though not of necessity made on petition (3) supported by an affidavit (4) showing the grounds on which it was made. It is submitted also that notice should have been given, though it has been held that if a party has notice of the suit but does not appear, the fact that the plaint was under such circumstances amended without notice to hum did not nullify the decree thereafter made (1) A defendant (2) might similarly apply If neither party applied, the Court might, under clause (b), of its own motion in the specific cases therein mentioned, return the plaint to the party to be amended by hin so as to remove the particular objections which might exist to it The party himself then amended his plaint But under clause (b) the plaintiff need not have amended at all after the plaint was returned to hun, but if he did not he incurred the penalty of sect 54 (3) The Original Court could not, unless acting under the orders of an Appellate Court, return a plaint after settlement of issues, for after that period the power to amend was with the Court alone, (4) but if the plaint required amendment and the fact was only discovered after issues had been settled, the Court could amend the plaint at any time before judgment (5) It was apparently not intended by the Legislature that any necessary amendment should take any form other than that of an amendment in writing on the face of the plaint, and the Court was not competent to order an amendment so is to require that a plan should be appended to the plant (6) Straight, J. incidentally expressed an opinion that a plaint after being once returned for amendment and amended accordingly, could not be returned again for amendment (7) In cases in which leave under the Charter had to be obtained prior to the institution of the suit no such amendment could be allowed as would introduce a new cause of action, for the grant of leave must be taken to relate to the suit as put forward in the plaint on which leave is endorsed by the Judge accepting it (8) When a plaint was returned a time had to be fixed within which the amendment must be made (9) Tho Court, however, had a discretion to extend even after the time originally fixed for amendment had expired (10) If the plant was not unended within the time fixed it was reserted under sect 54 (d)

But where the defect was such that it was covered by the provisions of sect 578 of that Code, there was no increasity to take any steps to produc the amendment of the plaint (1). The Allahal at High Court has in some cases remanded the case under sect 562 of the firmer Code with an order for the return of the plaint to the plaintiff for duly against and verificial the same (2).

Clause (li) of sect. 53 of former Code—See as regards clause (ii), O MI, it I 6, oth. The general intention and meaning of a plaint should be regarded, and it should not be retuined for want of correctness upon grounds of shight and numerical mustake (i). multifarronsness being discovered at the first hearing, the Court might, on the defendant's application before any evidence was recorded, require the plaintiff to elect which cause of action he would proceed to trial upon, and should direct the remainder of the claim to be withdrawn and the plaint amended accordingly (1) Whilst the Court could not return the plaint after settle ment of issues it might amend it at any time. If there were misjoinder of causes of action the plaint might be amended by striking out the part which was not properly joined (2) Where there was imagoinder but the first Court proceeded to trial, not having returned the plaint for amendment or amended it, it should dispose of the case on the merits (3) There was nothing in the Code to warrant the proposition that when a Court of first instance decided a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiff there was an end of the matter, and the defendant was precluded from raising the question in appeal (4) Where, however, a suit was not objected to on the score of misjoinder of causes of action at or before the settlement of issues in the Court of first mstance the Court seeing, in second appeal, that the suit had proceeded through three Courts, did not feel justified in dismissing the smt (5) The Appeal Court mucht dispose of the suit in the mode in which the lower Court ought to have disposed of it if it had held as it ought to have done, that there was a misjoinder and might direct that the plant be returned for amendment (6)

Amendment by Court under clause (a) of former Code—This clause did not form part of the Code as enacted in 1887, and together with the words "at or 'in clause (b), was introduced by sect 9 of Act VII of 1888 (7). The words "at any time before judgment mennt substantially the same as the words "at any stage of the proceedings" in the corresponding English rule, O 28, r 1 under which leave to amend was refused after judgment, but an amendment might be made at any time so long as anything remained to be done in an action, though it be only the assessment of damages, and even on an application for a near trial (8). Under clause (c) the Court itself might amend at any time before judgment but not after (9). The plaint still remained on, and was part of the file, although the Court might depute any person selected by it to take the plaint for example, to a pardamashin woman who was plaintiff, or to a person who through illness was unable to ittend Court for the purpose of its order being complied with. Any amendine inder such circumstances would be an amendment by the Court itself. Under

There are some observations, however, in Bai Shri Manraba t Maganial, 19 B 303 (1894), but these and some others as to the powers of an Appellate Court were not necessary for the decision, the basis of which was that the character of the suit had been changed And of the plaintiffs' right and to ie hear the appeal (1) It has, however, been said to be undesirable to allow amendment in second appeal when the plaintiff has in two Courts never contemplated it, and has even gone so far as to persist ently maintain his case as originally brought (2) Amendment has been refused with reference to a state of facts occurring since the decision by the original Court (3) Amendment has also generally been refused where the plaintiff persisted throughout that the suit as framed was maintainable, and permission to amend was not asked for in the lower Court (4) In a case where no amendment was asked for and refused in the Court of first instance, but, on the other hand objection was taken in the lower Court, and the plaintiffs elected to take an issue and to allow the suit to proceed subject to the risk of an edverse decision "It is true that, as a general rule, the plaintiff may be per mitted even, on appeal, to amend the plaint when he had framed it bona fide under a mistake or erroneous advice and the other party could be adequately compensated by an award of costs, but it must be observed that when such amendment might possibly create a necessity for fresh written statements and for fresh issues, and practically amount to a trial de novo from the commeacement, it is much more convenient to leave the plaintiffs to the liberty of meintaining a suit for ejectment, so that the opposite party might in no way be prejudiced in his defence or harassed with a second trial of the same suit " (5) The stage of the proceedings, whether in the original Court or Court of Appeal, at which an application for amendment is made might effect the question whether it should be granted as to which, see post

Proviso to sect 53 of last Code —The object of this proviso was only to prohibit amendments which involved the trial of issues substentially different from those raised by the original pleadings (6) See notes on "Change of character of suit" post

Present provisions as to amendment—R 16 is taken from Fighsh O 16, r 27, and rr 17 and 18 from O 28, rr 1 and 7 The latter rule provides that on failure to amend the order for amendment becomes void R 18 more specifically states what the effect of a failure to amend is From a review of the preceding case law and the provisions of sect 53 of the last Code, it will be seen that the present powers of amendment are given in much wider terms. Amendment may be either by the party or by the Court. No mention is made of return for amendment, but this may take place where the party applies or is directed to make an amendment. No

timo is fixed as to when the amountment may be made. It may be "at any stage of the proceedings. As to the meaning of this term, tide ante. Amendment by Court ' Amendment may be by the Court of first instance or uppeal, though the principles man which the Appellate Court will proceed in such cases are in general those stated. As regards missonnder, see now O I r 13, O 11 1 7, and sect 99 As to amendment of applications for execution, see O XXI r 17 An extremely important amendment is the omission of the provise in sect. 53, a matter which is dealt with next as are also the general principles on which amendment will be allowed. It may be broadly stated that in all eases where amendment has bitherto been allowed it will be permitted now, and that in many instances in which it has been refused it would be allowed under the present provisions the object of which is to extend to India the liberal principles which govern English Courts under which all such amendments are made as are necessary for determining the real questions in controversy between the parties subject to certain qualifica tions which are hereinafter stated

Case desired to be made must be raised. In the first place a question not raised by the plant ought not to be decided by the Court (1) The Judicial Committee has held (2) that though it is disposed to give a liberal construction to pleadings in Indian Courts so as to allow every question to he raised and discussed in the suit yet a plaintiff cannot be entitled to rollef upon facts and documents neither stated nor referred to in the plordings. The determination in a cause must be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made (3) Even where it was around that the plaintiff had been misled by various representations made by the defendant into framing his suit as it was then framed the Privy Council said that even if that were so it would not empower them to depart from the rule which has always prevailed that a man must recover according to his allegations and his proofs and that it would not enable them to allow an entirely new case to he brought forward which was not set up or hinted at in the plaint (4) I urther it is to be noted that stricter rules as regards pleading are enacted by the present Code

Matters in dispute should be ascertained not only from the plaint and maker, but also at the first hearing of the suit when issues are settled—and any indistinctness in the form of the plaint does not require that a decision come to upon issues fixed in the lower Court between the parties should be

cases the Judge will require evidence that the party applying to amend could not with reasonable dibgence have discovered the use facts sconer (I) Where the amendment has become necessary by reason of a variance between the statement of claim and the evidence given at the trial, it should be asked for at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case (2) After all the evidence on both sides has been taken, leave to amend will, as a rule, be refused (3) If the defendant is not present at the bearing, it has been held in England that notice must be given him of the application to amend (4) Unless the pleading is amended, the plaintiff cannot have judgment for more than the amount named in it (5)

After the hearing, and after judgment, the Court has no power to amend After an interlocutory judgment, or a decree in an Admiralty action which determines habitity but leaves the damages to be assessed, the Court still has power to amend the pleadings, (6) and even to add or substitute parties (7) As to amendment in appeal, side ante

General principles on which leave to amend is refused—The following are some of the principal grounds on which the Courts in their discretion may refuse leave to amend (8). Where the amendment desired could not be made without prejudicing the defendant in such a way that he cannot be recouped by costs, (9) and where a right accrued might be prejudiced (10). Thus, though it was under the last Code broadly held that a Court was not piecluded from allowing an amendment by the circumstance that at the time of the amendment a suit for what was added by the amendment would be barred by limitation (11) the general rule was that a plaintiff would not he allowed to amend by setting up fresh claims in respect of causes of action which have, since the institution of the suit, become barred, (12) though peculiar circumstances might take the case out of the ordinary rule, (13) and the Privy Council have actually allowed an amendment on the ground that, if the plaintiff were left to bring a fresh suit, it might be met by a plea of limitation, a defence which, under the circumstances of the case, was considered incomtable (I) In a recent case in the Madras Iligh Court it was held that a is fitten for an amendment of a plaint based on no new facts and asking for a further relief (in this instance, recovers of mones) may be allowed if it is out in before exidence has been taken, and if there is no injustice to the defendants. even when it is borred by limitation between it silate and the date of the plaint (2) Trivial and more technical amendments are discouraged (3). The Court will always consuler the materiality of the termosed amendment, and unless material amendment will not be allowed (1) A sheld delay as not a sufficient ground for refusing leave. But if an application which could easily have been made at a much carbor stage of the proceedings be delayed until after exidence eigen, and a mount of law argued, leave may be refused (5). This principle has been applied to the sunt itself. Where the identiff was culty of delay, and that the suit on the last day but one on which the law of lumitation would permit him to file it am pilment was refused (ii). The apidication may also be refused if the Court is not satisfied as to the truth and substantiality of the proposed amendment. and has reason to think that the application is not an honest one (7)

It has also been said by Lord Esher, M.R., to be "the universal practice, except in the most exceptional cases not to allow an amendment for the purpose of adding a plea of fraud where fraud has not been pleaded in the first instance (8) The circumstances referred to are doubtless those where the plaintiff thoroughly satisfies the Court upon the point why the charge was not made before. It is also a well known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud is charged. another kind cannot on failure of proof be substituted for it (9). It was field that a plaint which contained general allegations, but no specific instances of fraud could not be use aded in second anneal (10) and where fraud was charged. but the ant was brought in the wrong form, the Court refused to allow the plaint to be amended as to do so in that case would change the character of the suit (11) Peacock CJ said "We think that it would not be the exercise of a sound discretion to allow a party who relies upon a document to set up a fresh case, where an issue as to the execution of such document is found against him and there are good erounds for believing the document to be a forgery '(12)

Amendment of substance of plaint—An amendment may be sought, either in respect of the substance or form of the plaint, or the parties to the substance or form of the plaint is concerned, the matter has already been dealt with. If, for instance, as regards formal matters, the verification is defective, it will be amended (1) It is the duty of the Court to take care that the plaint, when filed is an accurate and sufficient statement of the essential ingredients of the plaintiffs claim (2) The subject of parties and rehef is dealt with in the following paragraphs.

Amendment as to parties -A plaint which may be amended in substance may require, by reason of such amendment, an amendment in respect of parties So a suit for collision, originally filed as an action in personan against the owners of the ship, has been amended also into an action in rem and the ship added as a party defendant (3) But amendment may have reference to parties only, as well as to the substance of the claim. Where a suit was brought hy several nersons on the basis of a right vested in them jointly and severally the plant was amended by the omission of the names of all th pl untiffs except one (4) The plaint will be amended where there is a change of parties, or the parties are wrongly described (5) But where the defendants were dead when the suit was instituted, the Court, on appeal, refused to amend by instituting the legal representatives, as the defendant was likely to be precluded from pleading limitation, (6) and where the wrong parties were such the Court in the under mentioned cases refused amendment (7) Where A and B sued, and it appeared that A alone was entitled, the name of B was ordered to ho struck out and the suit proceeded with (8) But where plaintiffs suing jointly succeeded only in making out the title of one of them to in undivided moicty the suit was dismissed (9)

Amendment as to rehef-In suits under the Code, the Court is certainly bound to take into consideration all the rights of the parties to the suit, whether legal or equitable, and by its decree to give effect to those rights as far as possible, but it should confine itself to granting such rebef as is prayed by the plaint (1) It cannot grant rebel of a different kind from that prayed for, such as could not have been properly granted except on an amendment of the plaint, (2) or change the smit so that the question involved in it is irrelevant to the rehef claimed (3) If, however, the specific right and infraction of it are not altered, the Court may give rehef less than that claimed, or a portion of the rehef claimed (4) The Court, however, whether of first instance or of appeal, has no power to make a decree in favour of the plaintiff beyond the amount stated in the plaint. The plaint may, however, be amended before judgment, so as to enable a Court to pass such a decree (5)

As regards amendment, it has been broadly affirmed (6) that "an alteration in the rehef does not alter the character of a suit " It is perhaps more correct to say that an amendment of relief samply does not generally (7) involve such a change in the suit as to make its character inconsistent in the terms of the proviso of the last Code It has also been held that where the object of an amendment of the plaint was merely to seek rehef ancillary to the principal prayer such amendment did not alter the character of the suit (8) So the rehef for declaration is in most cases for recovery of possession claimed is ancillary to the latter, and there can be no inconsistency hetween the two (9)

for pre-emption after filmg his plaint discovered that the property in suit had been described by mistake as being of a slightly less area than it was in reality, and omitted to claim for a small fraction of the share sold, the plaint was allowed to be amended (1) A change in the rehef asked is generally allowed on appeal, especially by the addition of a prayer for consequential relief in a suit for declaration (2) A plaint in a suit for the cancellation of a deed of gift of certain land has been amended so as to make it a suit for possession of that land after the cancellation of the deed (3) As regards events occurring after suit, the general rule is that the rights of parties must be ascertained as at the date of the action brought, and not with reference to events occurring after the institution of the action (1) But this section does not prevent a plaintiff, who has been ousted after suit brought for declaration of title, from amending his plaint hy adding a prayer for possession, the suit as amended not being inconsistent with the suit as originally framed, both being based upon the same title (5) Where the rehefs claimed and the facts on which they are claimed are stated in the original plaint, this can be amended by addition of further relief if it does not involve adding anything to the allegations in the plaint (6) And where a plaintift filed a suit to obtain a declaration that certain property belonged to his judgment debtor, and that the defendants had no light to it, and, pending proceedings, purchased the property, it was held thit he was still entitled to a declaratory decree, for the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him (7) But where an amendment rests on an event which did not occur until after the suit had been instituted and had been dealt with by the Court of first instauce and also substantially alters the original cause of action it will be disallowed (8) A mortgagee miy relinquish his claim for sale and ask simply for a money decree Such an amend ment does not amount to a conversion of the suit into a suit of another and inconsistent character (9)

as a matter of discretion. Sect 33 of the list Code was, however mandatory in this, namely, that no amendment could be allowed which converted a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. While the power of the Court extended to the client ition of what was amingnous, to the amendment of what was erroneous, and the supplying of what was defective, it did not extend to the conversion of a suit of one character into another inconsistent with and opposed to it, eg a suit for possession with mesne profits into one for resumption (1) or a claim on contract to one in tort (2)

A number of cases will be found reported (not very profitably) on this point, for it must be remembered that each case is only an authority so far as the same set of facts may (which is unlikely) exist in a subsequent case (3) In some decisions a formal application was made to amend. In others a new case was sought to be argued which, however, could only have been done after an application to amend had been made and granted, and the matter was dealt with as in effect an application to amond, since a decree could only be made on alky itions formally raised at the trial. Further, it is to be noted that the application for amendment was made at differing stages of the suit and under different circumstances, and it may be that as already stated, an application which if made before the hearing would be granted. might, if mide after hearing be refused. Whether an incondinent is inconsistent with the suit as originally framed may be tested by in inquiry into the nature of the evidence to be offered in either case (1) Amendment was not allowed, on the ground that the suit had been changed in the following cases - commencement ruse an alternative case. Where he has not done so he may have leave to amend his plaint and to state his case correctly therein if the Court thinks that he has rested his claim upon wrong grounds from misinformation, ignorance of law or fact, mistake or musconstruction of documents (1) Where in a sint for the recovery of a sum due on account, the defendant raised a plea of limit ition leave was granted to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledge ment signed by the defendant within the period of limitation (2) Where in a suit for rent the plaintiffs described themselves as "executors and trustees of the properties of in endowment" they were allowed to describe themselves as "de facto managers and persons interested in the endowment" (3) Where it was argued that an amendment allowing an alternative case to be raised con verted the suntanto one of another and meansistent character, it was held that the alternative claim which aroso out of, and was immediately connected with, the same transaction was not inconsistent, (4) the Court, however, adding that the proviso to this section in the last Code must be read with sects 42 and 45 of that Code and was not intended to interfere with them. Sed guare as to whether this was not stited too broadly. It does not follow that because a plant might have originally been brought in a particular form, but was not, that therefore it must be amended into that form If so the object of the pro vision might in some cases be defeated

As already pointed out the section has been now unended. In all cases the Court has a discretion (5) In exercising that discretion, it will, following the English practice, in general refuse an amendment which changes the action into one of a substantially different character which would more conveniently be the subject of a fresh action The question thus becomes one of discretion and not subject to a rigid rule Whether amendment should be allowed must depend on the circumstances of each case Mere technical arguments showing a conversion of character will not be given effect to There are such cases of conversion where amendment may be properly allowed On the other hand any substantial change in the claim made, making it more convenient that they should be tle subject of a fresh action will be refused

Costs-In England the amendment may be allowed ' on such terms as may be just' (6) And the Courts may therefore there impose terms as to other matters than costs (7) In this country the Courts could formerly by the terms of the former section impose terms only in regard to costs. As to these they are entirely in the discretion of the Court and they are sometimes (particular larly when the application is made before trial) reserved (8) The section has, however now been amended in conformity with the English rule

ORDER VII.

Plaint.

- 1. The plaint shall contain the following particulars:—

 Particulars to be contained in plaint:

 (a) the name of the Court in which the suit is brought:
- (b) the name, description and place of residence of the plantiff.
 - (c) the name, description and place of residence of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained:

(d) where the plaintiff or the defendant is a minor or a person

- of unsound mind, a statement to that effect;

 (e) the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose:
- (f) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction;

(q) the relief which the plaintiff claims;
(h) where the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinguished

- a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished, and

 (i) a statement of the ratic of the subject-motter of the suit
- (i) a statement of the value of the subject-motter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of court-fies, so far as the case admits.
- 2. Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint shall state the precise amount claimed:

 But ukere the plaintiff sus for mesne profits, or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant the oppoint shall state approximately the amount sued for
- 3. Where the subject matter of the sun is ammoreable property where the subject party, the plant shall contain a description of matter of the sun is the property sufficient to identify it, and, in circummorable property such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, the plant shall specify such boundaries or numbers.

- 4. Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character, when plaintiff sues as representative. the plaint shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it.
- 5. The plant shall show that the defendant is or clams to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is hable to be called upon to answer the plantiff's demand.
- 6. Where the sunt is instituted after the expiration of the Grounds of exemption period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaint shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Plaint -The object of a plaint is simply to state the grounds and rehef upon and in respect of which a suitor seeks the assistance of the Court Its essential parts are (1) the title or as it is sometimes called, the caption, (11) the statement, and (111) the relief, the first of which is referred to in clauses (a), (b), (o), and (d) of rule 1, the second in clauses (e) and (h), and the third in The provisions of sect 50 which these rules replace was criticized as not complete. Thus it has been said it is "a general rule, and the section appears to presuppose that the capacity of parties sung or sued should be alleged in the plaint, but it does not provide for such allega tions expressly Similarly, in the case of joinder of causes of action, the circumstances allowing the joinder should be stated, but there is no provision as to that There appears to be no doubt, however, that on the analogy of the practice of other countries all such facts should be stated in the plant notwithstanding the last clause of sect 53, clause (b) (n) which provides for a return of the plaint for amendment if it contains particulars other than those mentioned in this section. It is held in the United States that the fact of partnership should be alleged in the plaint, as partnership demands and habilities being joint, such allegation is necessary to authorize the joinder So also, the value of smt and the locality of its subject matter and of its cause of action, and other circumstances on which the jurisdiction of the Court may depend must be alleged Thus the Bombay High Court Circulars (Chap I r 4) expressly lay down, that in every suit the Court shall require the plaintiff to state clearly in the plaint how the value of the suit has been arrived at, and that in a suit for the price of goods sold retail, the plaint should either set out the account in detail, or should be accompamed by a copy of the account to be served upon the defendant Similarly, if any law authorizes a suit only after the plaintiff has taken some other proceedings, given some notice, or received leave or sanction of some Court or obtained a certificate of some officer, the plaint must state that those proceedings have been taken, notice given, leave or sanction received, or certificate obtained, as the case may be (1). The amended section adds a statement of the value of the subject matter

'Shall contain'-The word formerly used was "must, and was held to be a strong imperative (2)

Title Rule 1, clauses (a), (b), (c), (d) -The name should be given, if possible, in full and to the extent necessary to fully identify the party. If there be more than one plaintiff, or more than one defendant the name of each must be given. As to cases of agents, assignees, benaumdars, partners, and others, see notes to O I rr 1, 1 And as regards suits by or against Govern ment and public officers (3) shens and foreign native rulers (4) corporations and companies (5) trustees and executors (6) firms (7) minors (8) and military men (9) see also the portions of the Code noted

"If a person such in a representative or efficial capacity the capacity should be indicated in the titl. The same should also be done when he sucs merely as a member of a firm or as secretary or agent of some corporation. or on behalf of a larger numb r of persons. And the capacity is generally in liested by adding to the name of the party a designation denoting the special character or capacity which he sustains. But the designation may be taken as merch descriptio persona unless it is preceded by the word 'as' or some equivi I nt of it (10) And the general rule appears to be that the capacity in which a party sucs or he sued should not only be indicated in the title but stated in the body of the plaint also (11)

To describe the plaintiff as residing in Chitpore Road in the town of Calcutta is not a sufficient description of his place of abode nor is it sufficient under this section to describe the defendant as formerly of Calcutta without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his place of residence more definitely (12) Where it was contended that the plaint was bad as the clum was set out by G W H manager (of a bank) but the words should have been "The Mussoone Bank Limited it was held to be no ground for returning the plaint as the intention and meaning of the plaint was clear that the circum stances set out applied to the bank and the words were not capable of any other meaning (13)

The defendant's name is given in the plaint in the same mauner as the pluntiff s

All those titles by which a party is generally known ought to be given and it is not the true construction of the section "to say that where a man has titles, the claim to which titles cannot rationally be disputed by which he is generally known all that the Code requires is that he should be described in such a way ' as may be sufficient for identification (1) In the case cited an order rejecting the plaint because plaintiff did not amend it, so as to give the full titles to the defendant was held to be correct, their Lord ships of the Privy Council observing that "If a plaintiff, from ammosity, from pique or anything in fact but a bone fide dispute as to the right to a title, obstinately refuses to give his adversary that title by which he is gener ally recognized the Court ought not to permit or sanction that species of meult

Where a practice caisted in the Madris Courts to give as part of the description the age as well as the father's name, and these were not given the High Court refused to interfere with an order rejecting the plaint (2) It is not sufficient to describe the defendant merely as formerly of Colootellah in Calcutta without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his present residence (3) Where a plaint described the defendant as " Mrs S G B of Mussoerie 'and stated that she was excentrix of the deceased B, it was held not to be open to objection as it was clear that the defendant was stated to be executrive of the deceased and the suit was brought against her in that capacity (4)

There is no provision in the Code as to how the defendant is to be sued and named in the plaint when his real name is not known to the plaintiff and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence (5) Names are only used to designate persons and as a means of identifying them. The action is not against the name, but against the person designated thereby. If therefore the real defendant has been properly served with a summons in a fictitious name and he does not appear to defend the suit a judgment rendered against him in such name will be as effective against him as if his true name had been given in the proceedings in the action (6)

It is one of the first essentials of a suit that the parties, and specially the defendant must be alive at the time of the institution of the suit If the person named as defendant is found to have been dead at the time of the presentation of the plaint, the Court will have no jurisdiction over it,(1) and must refuse to proceed further, leaving the plaintiff to begin de roto against any person against whom he may have a right to proceed (2) It has even been held in the United States that if one of the defendants was dead the judgment will be void as against the other defendants also (3) And the principle appears to be of a general application Thus Freeman, in his work on Judgments, (4) observes that "no sort of jurisdiction can be obtained against one who was dead when suit was commenced against him as a defendant, or in his name as plaintiff, and that no indical record can be made which will estop those claiming under him from showing that he died before the action was begun, and that a judg ment for or against him must necessarily be void" It is stated (5) that the Courts in several States of the American Union have held the same even in suits against a corporation, commenced after its being dissolved,(6) though the rulo does not appear to have been there applied with the same strictness in the case of a plaintiff (7) Thus a judgment in a suit instituted in the name of a purty who is dead at the time the suit is brought has been held in some cases to be only voidable (8) And Mr Black in his work on Judgments (9) observes that " if an action is commenced in the name of a person already dead in interest or if one of several joint claimants is dead before action brought it is held that the defendant must take advantage of the fact by plea in abatement at the peril of heing estopped by his silence and the judgment for plaintiff will not be disturbed " (10)

A description of a party as insane in the plaint is not evidence that he was excluded from the inheritance by reason of insanity when the succession opened (11)

The statement Rule 1, clauses (e), (h) —A plaintiff when he files his suit must allege the cause of action in the manner prescribed in this rule, and must prove the necessary allegations in so far as they are not admitted by the defendant (12). trial whit is the real point to be discussed and decided (1) The two points to be attended to are the form of, and then the contents of, the state ment As to the first, the former section states that the language must be both plan and concise (2) This is a matter now dealt with in O VI r 2 The material parts should be stated in a summary form, clearly and precisely yet briefly and succinctly. While a liberal construction should he given to pleadings, so as to give effect to their meaning to be collected from their whole tenor, they ought to be expressed with sufficient definite ness to enable the apposite party to understand the case he is called upon to meet (3) To word probaty, the pleader should omit every allegation which is immaterial and unnecessity, as also all unnecessary details when alleging parts which are material (1) A certain amount of detail is necessary ' Although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise" (5)

The statement of facts must be with specific particularity, and not by way of vague generalizations As observed by Reed J in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Colorado in Robinson v Dolores (6) "the conclusions of the pleader stated is facts broad generalizations sweeping and comprehensive assertions of consputer fried, mismanagement and incompetency, caunot be made, in pleading, to supply the wants of specific facts

Thus it is a settled rule, that in an action for falso and fraudulent misrepresentation the statement of claim should state the details of each alleged nusrepresentation (7) In fact it is a general rule, that where fraud is intended to be charged, its details must be specified, and general allegations, however strong, are insufficient to constitute an averment of it (8) See O V r 4 In the first cited case Lord Selborne observed, that "with regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they we stited, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice" This was cited with approval in the Privy Council,(1) by Lord Watson, who said: "When fraud is charged against the defendants, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. There can be no objection to the use of such general words as 'fraud' or 'collusion,' but they are quite ineffectual to give a fraudulent colour to the particular statements of fact in the plaint, unless these statements, taken by themselves, are such as to imply that a fraud has actually been commutted" Thus a plaint to set aside in award must definitely state some fraud or other malpractice of the opposite party (2) The decision of the Privy Council cited, was acted upon in a case (3) in the Bombay High Court, bulton J, observing that the plaint ought, mumedistely on presentation, to have been rejected or returned for amendment, as it did not disclose a cause of action. A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid (1) and it must be so proved at the hearing of the case, and cannot be reserved and proved in the course of taking Facts must be stated as facts Modern pleadings are merely concise statements of the facts. Internees of law should not be pleaded. Pleadings should not contain mere arguments (6). A plauntiff thus cannot ever that "he is entitled to 'property, for this is a conclusion of mixed fact and law Ho must state the facts which, in his opinion, give him that title. This material facts only should be pleaded. But each party must always state his whole case, and all the facts which are essential to the cause of action, but not the ordenee by which they are to be proved, (7) though "there are many cases in which facts and evidence are so mixed up as to be almost undistinguishable" (8). In other words only operative facts, as distinguished from probative or evidential facts should be pleaded, and of the former, only the ultimate facts.

The plaint should include all the existing points on which the plaintiff or un succeed (9). And a plaintiff is only entitled to succeed upon the cause of action illeged by him in his plaint (10). It is not, however necessary for the plaintiff to state in what form of action he sues (11).

Where the plant discloses all the facts constituting the cruse of action the form of the action is muniforal. Thus, in a suit for mortgage money and interest by the enforcement of the mortgage here even if the hypothecation is not proved a personal decree may be given for the amount claused as damages.

for breach of the contract to give possession of the mortgaged property, (1) the Court observing, in the latter cited case, that it was immaterial whether the domaid was regarded in the light of a suit for compensation in damages for breach of the contract, or for money had and received for the plaintiffs use, or for money lent So also, in a suit for rent on a Labulyat, if the Labulyat is not proved, a decree may be given for rent at the rate proved to be paid before the alleged habulyat if there should be evidence of that, (2) even though that may not have been expressly clumed in the plaint. In the under mentioned case (3) this was not done, as there was no such cyidence, but the Full Bench said "It is in the discretion of the Court to amend the plant or the issues, and to allow it (i.e the alternative claim for rent paid before) to be tried And where the omission to make the claim in the plaint appears to have been from madvertence or hy mistake, it would be proper to do so " Where in a sint for possession of certain land on the basis of a lease granted to plaintiff in 1231, it was alleged that the plaintiff had continued to hold it since then as a lessee from year to year, he was allowed a decree on the ground of the facts proved showing that he had an occupancy right, such alternative title not being inconsistent with the alleged title under the lease (4)

Nortly, as to the contents of the statement A defendant is entitled at the cultest stage of the hearing to obtain the declaration of the Court upon the quostion whether the plaint discloses a cause of action (5)

Among ultimate operative facts the plaintiff's title or right which has been infringed must be first stated The expression "cause of action" has been understood to be used in this section in its broad sense, as including both the infringement and the right infringed, which latter must therefore be set out in the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action. Thus, in a suit for redemp tion of a mortgage, the mortgage must be stated (6) In a suit for a declaration of title to a property which the plaintiff admits was sold to the defendant's ancestors, and to which the plaintiff cannot establish a right without setting aside that sale, the plaintiff should allege the circumstances which he rehes upon for avoiding it (7) And where the plaintiff's right to the thing sued for is derived by assignment the fact of the assignment ought to be stated in the plant (8) A plaintiff sung for possession of land by redemption of the mort gage, must show in his plaint the existing title he intends or hopes to prove, and upon which he rehes as entitling him to the rehef which le isks (9) It is a general principle, that a plaintiff suing for possession must show that at the date of the suit he was entitled to that rehef (1) It has thus heen held that the owner of demised land cannot sue to eject even a trespasser so long as the lease is outstanding (3) The Punjab Chief Court, in its functions (3) to Judicial Officers, land down that "it should appear in the plaint that the persons, if more than one, who sue together as plaintiffs, all, either jointly, severally, or in the alternative, claim the right which it is the object of the suit to vindicate"

Where the plaintiff's right alone constitutes the eause of action, it will he sufficient to allege only that right. Thus, in an action for partition, the plaint should state the titles and interests of the co tenants, plaintiff and defendant, but it is neither necessary nor proper to show any deraignment of the plaintiff's title (4) But where the suit has been necessitated by any act done to peopardize the plaintiff's right or evidence of it, that act should also he stated Thus, in a suit for a declaration of right, the plaint should specify not only the title to that right hut also the act of interference with that right (5) and the circumstances which necessitate the application for the declaration (6) Where in a suit hy a relative of a minor against his administrator, the plaint merely stated that the conduct of the defendant was im proper, and that the plaintiff had suspicions that the defendant would waste the property of the nunor, but failed to specify any instance of inalversition or to give any reason, plausible or otherwise for behaving that the defendant would waste the estate, the plaint was rejected (7) Similarly, in a suit to compel one's neighbours to agree to a particular hae of houndary being marked out between plaintiffs lands and theirs it must be stated that they have by some overt act transgressed that boundary (8) In a suit to have a contract cancelled and the plaintiff's deposit returned with damages, the plaint only alleged that the contract was "caused by one of the purios to it heing under a mistake as to a matter of fact and the High Court held that as that would not have made the contract voidable the plaint did not disclose a cause of action and that it should have been returned for amendment on that ground (9)

Where a suit is based on the actual infringement of a right, the infringement and the facts constituting the infringement should also be stated. Thus mas with for damages for injury done, the nature of the injury should be act out (2) And a suit to fix a boundary should show that the boundary has been transgressed (3)

The plaintiff may have his claim on alternative titles which are not meon sistent with each other, (1) as, for example, when a person claims possession of certain land by hereditary queashta right, or, in the alternative, by the right d rived from adverse possession for twelve years, (5) or upon a mortgage and deed of sale (6) And a mortgagor sung for redemption may aver that the mortgage money has been repaid, and that if anything he found to be due, that he will pay it (7) But inconsistent titles, it has been held, should not be allowed to he put forward, as, for example, a claim to hold a hat on the ground of title by prescription, and of proprietary right to the land where the hal is held (8) In the case below, (9) the gist of the plaintiff's charge against the defendant was that she never excented a deed of sale in his favour, and that the document set up by him was a forgery, and it was observed that it was not competent to the plaintiff to combine with that charge as an alternative the wholly inconsistent charge that if the plaintiff executed the document no consideration was received by her, or that fraud had been practised on her The Bombay High Court has held that inconsistent assertions of fact cannot be permitted in the pleadings, but that on the same basis of facts two distinct titl's may be put forth (10) The decision cited of the Madras High Court was dissented from by Allahabad High Court in a case (11) in which the claim was for a declaration that a hand was not executed by the plaintiff, or, at least, that it was null and void for want of actual and valid consideration, and the Court observed that the Code did not anthorize the rejection of a plaint containing prayers for such rehefs, and that it was unable to follow the Madras High Court "in holding that a Court has power to throw out a sint on the ground that, in its opinion, the plaint sets up two inconsistent cases" It, however, stated that if a plaintiff chooses to come into Court on a plaint which contains allegations inconsistent with one another, this circumstance might militate strongly against the planniff succeeding in the suit though it would not justify the Court on this ground alone in dismissing it. In England, the old rule of pleading (12) was that a plaintiff could not plead inconsistent field

But the Judicature Act his cularged the liberty of the plaintiff in claiming relief, and it is held that there is nothing to provent either party from setting up two or more meonsistent sets of material facts and claiming rehef thereunder in the alternative,(I) and ever smee the Judicature Act inconsistent defences, such as never indebted and payment, are duly pleaded. It is to be observed, however, that there are differences between the position of a plain tiff and a defendant. The plaintiff often has a personal knowledge of the facts which the defendant may not have, and while it is open to a plaintiff under certain eireumstances to reservo a ground of claim, a defendant failing to insist on a ground of defence in one action cannot raise it afterwards in another action at the smt of the same party. The defendants may be complete strangers to the transactions and the defences raised may have reference to matters not necessarily or probably within their own knowledge. So a Hindi wrote his will, devising certain ancestral property to his wife, and on the following day he registered it and took the plaintiff in adoption The testator died shortly afterwards It was found that the plaintiff's natural father was aware of the dispositions contained in the will, and that the testator would not have adopted the plaintiff but for the consent of the natural father to those dispositions defendants who claimed under a gift from the wife had demed the adoption in their written statement and on appear raised the further plea that the adoption, if any, was conditional on the provisions of the will being acquiesced in held, that the defendants were not precluded from succeeding on the latter of these inconsistent pleas (2)

Probably having regard to the scope of the Code the rule which should be followed is that inconsistent and alternative claims are allowable it arising out of facts which are not inconsistent, and that a plaintiff should probably not in any case, and certainly not where the facts are presumably within his knowledge, be allowed to plead inconsistent facts but should be called upon to elect so that the defendant may know what case he has to meet, and that a defendant similarly should not he allowed to plead inconsistent defences unless he is a stranger to the transaction and the true state of facts is not within his personal knowledge. Thus it has been held that a Mahomedan plaintiff who first claimed the property in suit as the here of his father, on the ground that his mother had no title to it could not in the same suit contend that his danghter had acquired a good title to it from his mother and that therefore he wis entitled to it (3)

A plaintiff must be hunted to the ease which he puts forward in the plaint but he may put forward therein an alternative ease from the commence ment as the defendant will then know that he has more than one ease to meet, and will not be taken hy surprise (4) The different titles should be set ont in the alternative, for a claimant who has failed to recover property under one title may be barred from hunging a second suct to recover the same property by a different title (1) Where in an action of ejectment against a traint holding over, the lease such on wis inidimensible in evidence for want of registration and the plaint was not amended to one containing an alternative claim for partition held that the plaintiff could not be allowed to fall back upon his some il title and obtain a decree for partition (2)

from the commencement.

As to the place where a cause of action must be deemed to arise see notes to seets 19 and 20, ante. The date of accrual is a question of substantivo law it should be given as correctly is practicable (3). In the case cited the suit was for possession and it was held that the date of the plantiffs dispossession must be given as icentrately as possible, especially when one of the issues was whether he had been in possession within tickety as to rehnquishment, soo O II r. 2, ante, and as to set off O VIII r. 6 post

Celinical objections, however should not, unless where it is absolutely necessary be allowed to prevail. Thus where it was objected that a plaint had been drawn for rectification of a compromise instead of a decree, it was held that this was a mero technicality since rectification of the decree would follow if the plaint was successful (4). In the under mentioned case, (5) Couch CJ and the plaint in this case is drawn as so many plaints are, in a very improper inamier with reference to the cause of suit but this Court cannot allow a plaintiff to be defeated in his suit on account of the improper form of the plaint if looking at the whole of it we cause, which is the cause of suit. Of comes we are not to allow a plaintiff to succeed upon a cause of action which is not in the plaint but the language of these plaints is not to be read too strictly arily we certainly are not willing to give effect to any technical objections among upon it. This and similar cases were decided many years ago and stricter rules have been now enacted in O. VI. A document referred to in the plaint is not necessarily a part of it (6).

Relief Rule 1, clause (g)—The object of a suit is to obtain some particular remedy or rehef. This is stated in the prayer of the plaint for just as the defendant is entitled to know what facts the plaintiff rehes on and intends to prove in order that he may meet them for the same reason he is cuttiled to know what use the plaintiff intends to make of his alleged facts and the Court should know the nature of the plaintiff is demand which when obtained is embodied in its judgment. In the corresponding provision of the New York Code 'judgment is substituted for rehef in order to exclude from the plaint prayers for provisional remedies which it has been said need not find room in it (7). Mention need not be made in it of that which is machiner; for the grant of the richef prayed for. Thus it has been held that a demand for money will include a prayer for its recovery by the sale of the 1 roperty held in mortgage for it (8) and it is not necessary to mention the sale in the plant. In a suit for contribution, the amount due from each defendant should be specified; but where this cannot be done, the ascertainment of the amount should form a portion of the relief sought (1) A suit, it was held, is often brought only for accounts, and a subsequent suit for the halance (2) It is preferable and more convenient, bowever, that the suit should be not only for an account, but for an adjustment of accounts and for navment of the balance that may be found due This is the usual practice on the Original Side of the Presidency High Courts, and it is specially desirable in regard to suits against agents in cases in which, as under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. the period of lunitation runs from the date of the termination of the agency. because the a_ent may make delay in giving the accounts, so that the subse quent sout for balance may be barred (3) The charet as to which a rebef is claused should be described with sufficient fulness so that there may be no doubt or difficulty as to its identification Thus, where the chiect of a sint is to prevent the plaintiff's rights over certain lands from heine inferinced upon, the houndaries of the lands should be given in the plaint (4) See the new third rule in this Order and notes to O XX r 9, post But it has been held that a plaintiff's suit did not necessarily fail upon the ground that there were no boundaries given in the plaint when they asked merely for a declaratory decree in respect of their title (5) And the mere onussion from the schedule annexed to a plaint of the boundaries or other specifications of land will not exclude from the operation of the deerce matters which are by name strictly claimed in the plaint, and referred to as such in the decree (6) So, also, in a

^{142 (1873)} The corresponding section (.6) of the Code of 1859 expressly provided that "when the claim is for land, or lor any interest in land, the nature of the tenure or interest must be specified, and if the claim be for land forming part of a village or other known division or for a house garden or the like, its situation shall be described by the setting forth of boundaries, or in such other manner as may suffice for its i lenti ficat on. It has been pointed out (Hukm Chand, C P C 616) that though it slid not appear why this provision had been omitted in the Code of 1882 it was obviously desirable to have regard to it in the preparation of laints, and to so describe the land to which the buil relates, that there might be no

sunt for obstruction to a private right of way, the plaint ought to show with reasonable precision and exactitude the termin of the right of way and the course which it takes (1)

It has been held that alternative rebefs inconsistent with each other may be demanded, there being nothing in the Code against the junder of such reliefs (2). In the case cited, the plaintiff prayed to be declared the proprietor of the whole village, and, faibing that, to be declared its occupancy to unt, and it was held that the plaint could not be returned for amendment though, if it become necessary to consider whether the second relief could not be granted for wint of jurisdiction in a Civil Court, the suit might have to be dismussed.

It is usual to me it a priyer for such further and other rehef, than the specific rehefel united as the Court mix hold the plantiffentialed to. A plantiff may in such case have rebot according to what he has alleged and proved the private for general rehef will support any rehef consistent with the cis mad in the plant, provided that there is no supprise on the defendants and that they suffer no inconvenience by it (3). So under the general priyer the Court has grunted in injunction (1). But under a priyer for general rehef to plaintiff is not entitled to my rehef which is inconsistent with his plaint (3). It must be considered as limited by the facts alleged and by the prayer for express rehef (6). Under it is not now necessary to all for general rehef.

Relief not founded on the pleadings should not, as a rule, he granted. But where substantial matters which constituted the title of all the parties are touched in the issues and have been fully put in evidence and formed the main subject of discussion and decision in the Courts, the case does not come within the rule, and a declaration of the rights of the parties, though not founded on the pleadings may be made (7)

The plant must show not only in actual existing interest, but also that the plaintiff has taken the stans necessary to enable him to sue. The Indian Succession Act of 1865 (sect 187) provides that no right as executor or legator can be established without probate or letters of administration and (sect 190) no right to an intestate's property can be established without letters As regards, bowever, Hindus and Mahomedans, neither of administration of whom are coverned by this Act, the general rule is that there is no law which obliges a person claiming under a will to obtain probate (2) Nor generally are letters of administration necessary. Upon this general rule, however, are engrafted two special provisions. Seet 187 has since been embodied in the Hindu Wills Act 1870, but it was excluded from the Probate Act. 1881 The result is, that sect 187 upplies to cases governed by the Hindu Wills Let, but does not apply to wills executed by Mahomedans or by those Hindus who are not governed by the Hindu Wills Act. and nn recutor of theirs can sue without taking out probate (3) Further, no Court can pass a decree against a debtor (1) of a deceased person or proceed to execute a decree against such debtor except upon the production of probate. letters of administration, or certificate mentioned in the Succession Certificate Act (5) A certificate may be obtained in respect of particular debts due to

And this is 50 also in the case of a suit continued hy a legal representative. Administration is not necessary for revival (6) And where a certificate was granted by a Court in a native State, and a true copy of it signed by the Political Agent of the State and stamped with the court fee required by the Court Fees Act, was produced by the plaintiff but there was nothing to show that the Political Agent intended to grant a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, it was held that though a decree should not have been granted, yet time should have been allowed for the production of a proper certificate (7) It is doubtful whether the Act applies to the case of a person who has been substituted as plaintiff for one who having taken out a certificate, has died pending the suit (8) See also next paragraph

The liability of the legal representative of a deceased debtor to be sued in al solute. and not dependent on the assets having come into his hands, it being sufficient to give a decree against him that there are assets of which he may have become posse sed, though he will be liable under the decree only as a legal representative (f) A decree obtained against a brother and an aunt of the deceased debtor, and proceedings taken in execution against them, will give to the plaintiff no title to the property forming the estate, and if after the sale a person takes letters of administration to the deceased, he will be entitled to the proceeds of the sale in execution held by the Court in preference to the decree holder (2) In Baswantapa v Ranu, (3) it was held that a decree against a person who is not an heir of the deceased and even a sale in execution of such a decree, can give no right to the decree holder, or to the nurchaser at the execution sale to the property which belonged to the deceased or to his real heir or fegal representative. In a suit by a creditor against the estate of a deceased debtor who has died leaving a will, his heirs in intesties do not represent his estate and the suit is had unless the estate is represented (1) If a Hindu sues as representing a joint family he should state it in the plaint (5) And a widow if sued as repre entative of her deceased husband should be so described (6) And this is a general rule where a per-on is sued as a representative as where defendants are sued as representatives of a taruad (7) A decree against a Hindu widow may bind a sen adepted during the hitigation but not brought on the record (8) On the death of one member of a joint Hindu family subject to Vitakshara law, his widow cannot represent him so as to make the joint property hable to his debts (9) As to widow a estate in moveables inherited from her lusband and the limbility of such property for her debts after her death see below (10)

Limitation (Rule 6)-This rule recognizes the principle that a plaintiff must not only show that he has a title, but that he has a sul sisting title, which he has not lost by the prescriptive sections of the Limitation Act (11) It has been said that under this provision a plaintiff cannot take advan tage of any ground of exemption from the law of hmitation which has not been set up in the plaint (12) But it has been recently held that this is not an inflexible rule If the plant shows the ground of exemption, the requirements of the Cede are satisfied, but the plaintiff is not precluded from taking another and an inconsistent ground to get over the bar of huntation if he behaves that the latter is the true ground (1)

7. Every plant shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alterna Relief to be specifi cally stated tire, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief, which may always be given as the Court may think just, to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement

Relief - This rule is new, and is taken from English O 20, r 6 The plaintiff should always claim in the one action every kind of rehef to which he is entitled be it damages or an injunction, a declaration or a receiver, for he will not be allowed to bring a second suit on the same cause of action to obtain rehef which he might have obtained in the first action (2) A Court in refusing a decree for specific performance may give a decree for the refund of the deposit with interest though the plaintiff had not sought this alternative relief (3) In a suit for the sale of mortgaged property, the Court may (in certain circumstances) pass a decree for redemption (4) As regarde prayer for general rehef, see notes to preceding rules

Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct on claims or causes of action founded upon separate Relief founded separate grounds and distinct grounds, they shall be stated, as far as may be, separately and distinctly

- (2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall endorse thereon Procedure on return- the date of its presentation and return, the Inspirate. name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

When plaint may be returned—The words of the rule are imperative (1) The section which this rule replaces did not, however, state at what stage of the suit the order could be made. The section itself was differently construed as applicable to any stage of the suit, and as referring interly to the time of presentation. The Calcutta High Court held that its provisions night be put in force at any stage of the hearing, and that it is not limited to the time of presentation, or before the defendant has been called on to state his ease, for the objection, if to valuation, would not appear upon the face of the plaint itself, but would naturally come from the defendant. Therefore, a Court was held to have erred which, after hearing the evidence on both addes, found that the suit had been undervalued, but instead of returning the plaint should be returned and the suit for dismissed after evidence in the first Court, (3) and after trial in the first Appellite Court or even in the High Court itself (1) The same views were entertained by the Madras High Court (2). The Bombay (3) and Allahabad (1) High Courts held, that while the section, corresponding to this rule, only contemplates the return of a plaint, should error be patent when it is first presented, yet there was nothing in the Code which forbade the return of a plaint at a later stage after the plaint has been admitted and the trial begin, or oven concluded, it being a general principle that a Court, on finding, whenever that may be, that it has not jurisdetion, should decline to proceed further in a cause placed before it. The shape, however, in which a suit is originally instituted is the test of jurisdiction, and a Court, after exercising jurisdiction by amending the plaint, cannot afterwards are result of jurisdiction with regard to the plaint so amended (5). The words "at any stage of the hearing," have now been inserted and remove all doubt on the question is assed in the cases sited.

The former section was held, however, not to apply to High Courts in the exercise of their original jurisdiction. The practice on the Original Side of the High Court at Bombay has been to return a plaint when further proceedings in a suit have been stopped for want of jurisdiction, and a plant is not returned except when, on presentation, the Judge is of opinion that it discloses no cause of action, or, it appears to him, that the suit ought to be brought in another Court (6). A similar practice prevails in the Calcutta High Court

It was held, prior to the Limitation Act, that the date of a suit must be taken to be that on which the plaint was originally filed, and not that on which it was filed in another Court as a plaint returned to be filed in that Court (?) It has been held that where a Court returns a plaint under this rule the Court on which the plaint is afterwards presented is bound to give credit for the ke levied in the first instance (8) When a plaint has been returned the suit when

"Should have been instituted."—In the Code of 1882 specific cases were mentioned in which the Court might return a plaint Where, however, a lower Court rejected a suit, but refused to return a plaint on the ground that the case did not fall within the provisions of this section, it was held, on appeal, that the circumstances of the case cime within clauses (o) and (e) of the corresponding section of the Codo of 1882, but even were it not so, in overy case where the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit the proper procedure was to return the plaint (2) This is now midd clear, the second set of italicized words in the first clause being substituted in lieu of the specific clauses (o), (b) (e) of the last Code

Appeal —An appeal lies under O XLIII r 1 (o) Under the circumstances of the case cited, (3) a party was held estopped from appealing against an order returning the plaint

11. The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases —

Rejection of plaint.

(b) uhere the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintif, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so

(c) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so

(d) where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law

Applicability of rule—It was held that clauses (b) and (c) did not apply to High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction (i). An opinion was also expressed that they did not apply to the High Courts in their appellate jurisdiction (5). But seet 5823 was, since that decision, added to the Code of 1882 by Act VI of 1892. See now seet 149, ant.

deficit Court fee he not put in within the time allowed by the Court, the latter ought to reject the plant. But if on the date on which the deficit Court-fee is ultimately put in, the suit is not barred the plaint may be regarded as if it was presented for the first time on that date, and the suit ought to be proceeded with (1)

"Time to be fixed "-The time fixed for making up stamp duty on a plaint may extend heyond the period of limitation for the smt If a plaint improperly stamped is given back to have a proper stamp fixed, the date of the surt is the date on which it was filed (2) and therefore no question of limita tion can arise There is nothing in the Code to render a presentation ineffectual hecause the plaint was insufficiently stamped (3) The view, however, has also been expressed that the presentation of an insufficiently stamped document which if sufficiently stamped could be treated as a plaint, cannot be regarded as the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect 4 of the Limitation Act. or of the Code (4) Therefore, when a Court fixes a time under clauses (b) or (c) of this section, it must be a time within limitation and this section does not _ive a Court power to extend the ordinarily prescribed period of limitation for suit (5) But in a recent case in the Bomhay High Court where a memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped was filed on the last day allowed by the law of huutation and the Court refused time to pay and rejected the memorandum this order was reversed on appeal and it was held that the Court had a discretion under sect 149, hunted only by clause (c) of this rule (6) Apart from the question of limitation, the Court can extend the period originally granted after the time originally fixed has expired (7) If however the order is not complied with within the time allowed the plaint will be rejected. So a plaint was filed one day before the express of the period of himitation but the Court fees were deficient and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the deficient Court fees within a week This order was complied with one day after the expiry of the time allowed and the plant was registered. Held, that the suit was harred by limitation as the deficient Court fees were not supplied within the appointed time, and that the Appeal from order rejecting plaint -An order rejecting a plaint is decree,(7) and is therefore appealable unless there is any statutory probi tion to the contrary (b) Whether there is such a prohibition depends pon the construction to be placed on sect 12 of the Court less Act (VII of 370), which chiefs that every question relating to valuation' shall be corded by the Court in which a plaint or memorandum of appeal is filed and uch decision shall be final is between the parties to the suit. According o one view which has been taken it was the intention of the framers of the 'ode that whenever a plaint is rejected under this section and in every case illing within it there is an appeal (9) the Court I ces ict not contemplating a case when the Court refuses to hear a suit (10) Therefore when a plaint is rejected under this rule cither because the relief sought is undervolved or because although the relief sought being preperly valued a sufficient Court fee stamp has not been paid there is an appeal (11) This view appears to proceed on the ground that the Code has removed the finality declared by sect 12 of the Court Fees 1ct (12) 'tecording to another view which has been taken the operation of sect 12 of the Court Fees Act is not effected by the Code but in certain cases there is no question relating to valuation within the meaning of that section and there is therefore an appeal under sect 96 of the Code (13) It has thus been held that the Court Pees Act opplies merely to decisions as to the valuation of a suit in a particular class when there is no question of the article in the schedule generaing the case but that an appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs, and there fore d fortion when a plaint is rejected or a suit dismissed, on this ground sect 96 has operation, there being no prohibition to the contrary (1) The Bomhay High Court, doubting the distinction drawn in the first of the Madrus cases cited, has said that where there really is a valuation to be made by a Judge in order to determine a variable proportional fee, it cannot be said that his reasoned choice amongst the several categories of suits is not as essential an element of his valuation as the subsequent arithmetical computation by which it is completed, and that where the Judge can enter on a valuation at all, the determination of the one factor, as much as of the other, must be a "question relating to valuation," and as such a question closed as between the parties by the Judgo's decision (2) But in some cases under the Court Tees Act a suit is one admitting of valuation by a Judge, in other cases the valuation rests with the plaintiff Again, in some cases the fee is ad valorem, thus admitting an inquiry by the Court, in other eases the feo is fixed The eases therefore where a Judge can enter on a valuation are quite different from those where an inquiry is quite gratuitously entered into, either because the matter rests in the discretion of the plaintiff or hecause the fee is fixed (3) The Bombay High Court has therefore held that on the question whether or not any particular suit was one admitting of valuation by the Judge an appeal has (4) An appeal has also been allowed where the Court of first instance rejected the plaint without giving the plaintiff an oppor tunity of affixing the proper stamp (5) In a suit for taking accounts valued at Rs 130, it was held that the appeal from the order, rejecting the plaint, lay to the District and not the High Court (6) Where excess stamps have been filed in consequence of an overvaluation of the appeal the surplus amount should be refunded (7)

Revision —A decision on valuation was, notwithstanding its declared finality, formerly held subject to revision (8)

Where rejection of plaint does not preclude presentation of fresh plaint.

The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds is literembefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action Effect of rejection —The rule, which corresponds with sect 36 of the Code of 1809, and sect 36 of the 18t Code, says 'efits own force' The claim max, however, of course, become, after rejection, burred by lapse of time (1) It is to be observed that the rule applies to rejection on any of the shounds hereinbel re-mentioned—that is, the grounds in r 11. It has seen it lith the where a junt has been rejected for default of appearance in the Mambatian's Court under sect 13, Bombay Act III of 1876, the rule of respudicies applies (2) Such a rejection is analogous rather to the procedure under 0.18 r 9.

Documents relied on in plaint

14 (1) Where a pluntiff sues upon a document m his is possession or power, he shall produce it in court when the plaint is presented, and shall such a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint.

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his cluin, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint

Document sued upon —This is a very wiso provision, its object being to provent the dishonest fabrication of documents (3) and to give the defendant notice of the documents riched on so as to enable burn to reply to the claim (4) All documents sued upon must be produced such as pottah (5) and title deeds (6) A defendant is entitled under the Madras High Court Rules to be furnished with a copy of documents sued on which are deposited with the plaint (7). It was field in an early case (8) that all documents delivered should be received and filled with the plaint, though, if not admissible in evidence they will after wards be rejected and rulemed. All the law is still the same that the mere production or filing of a document does not operate as its admission in evidence and that it will not be put on the record unless it is duly admitted in accordance with the rules prescribed.

(8) Roshun Jehan 2 I nayut Hossel Warsh 127 (1864) Document relied on.—The rule requires a plaintiff to file with his plant a list of all the documents on which he relies; that is, which he is then in a position to know to be essential to his case, whether in his possession or power, or not (1) These words will therefore [as they now expressly state, and was formerly held (2) under the corresponding sect. 39, clause (1) of the Code of 1859] include all the documents the plaintiff intends to use in evidence, and not only those which are the essence of the claim and on which the suit is based, (3) which are provided for by the first paragraph. They do not include, however, documents tendered merely for comparison of handwriting (1)

Penalty.—The penalty for not producing these documents when called on to do so is not the rejection of the plaint, but that prescribed in r. 18, viz not being able to put them in without the special leave of the Judge (5)

Inspection.—The Bombay High Court has held that it has not been the practice to order the plannin to give inspection of documents other than those relied on in the plannt, and inclinded in the list of documents annexed to the plannt as required by this rule, till after the written statement is filed, that that this is not, however, an inflexible rule in all eases. There may be cases where it would be impractive to order the planntiff to produce and give inspection to the defendant of a document which he may not have mentioned in the plant or onumerated in the list of documents annoved thereto (6)

(2) The Court, or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, onshal entry to be shall forthwith mark the document for the marked and returned purpose of identification, and, after examin ug and companing the copy with the original, shall, if it is found course the copy to be filed

Production—It was held that sett 39 of Act VIII of 1859, which corre sponds with this rule did not require the Court to inspect the document but only that it should be marked for identification and the copy compiled with the original (1). If the book is not produced before the suit is registered but a day is fixed for its production, the Court cranet even on a contumations non production of it reject the plaint the only effect of the non production being that provided in the next rule as to the incidentiability of the book in ovidence it any subsequent stage (2)

- (2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory

Scope of rule —This rule is intended not to prevent a person from commenting, his suit until he has collected all his documentary evidence but merely to place a check upon the fabrication of evidence by oxcluding documents not produced in the first instance unless a good and sufficient reason is given for their non-production at that time—and therefore if a document is not produced or entered in the list the plaint itself cannot be rejected (3)

"Shall not "-The words are imperitive,(I) and prohibit a plaintiff from using any document which he ought to have, but did not produce or enter, (2) unless the Court exercises the discretion given to it under this rule (3) But, as already stated, if a document is not produced or entered, the plaint itself cannot be rejected (1)

"Leave."-Where documents were referred to an Ameen to inspect, and were ultimately acted upon by the Court, this was held to be ahundant proof of "sanction," the term used in the Code of 1859 (5) It is a sufficient reason for the grant of leave that the plaintiff was in ignorance of the existence of the document when the plaint was filed , (6) that the document was with the Collector, to whom it had been sent for the purpose of being stamped; (7) or that the Court is satisfied of its bond fide nature and reliableness, (8) or if there is no doubt of the oxistence of the document at the date of snit (9) The question of reception is one of discretion, which will not be interfered with on appeal (10) Where, however, thuse papers which formed the very essence of the oction were not filed or produced, the Court was held to have been justified in rejecting them when subsequently tendered in evidence (11)

"Received in evidence."-Merely giving a decument to a witness to refresh his memory is not recoiving it in evidence, for a document may be se used which is not ovidence in itself (12) Such a document is therefore expressly excluded from the section

Appeal -The reception of ovidence afterwards with leave is not a ground of appeal (13) The odmission is conclusive even when no reasons are given and the Appellate Court cannot refuse to consider the admitted documents as evidence, (14) though of course, the Appeal Court moy attach such weight to the document as it thinks proper, or say whether it ought to be treated as ovidence os ogainst particular parties to the suit (15) But the refusal to receive a document may be a good ground of appeal (16)

ORDER VIII.

Written Statement and Sct-off.

1. The defendant may, and if so required by the Court, shall is in written statement.

at or before the first hearing or within such is time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence

"The defendant"—The rule has been reconstructed and shortened It formerly commenced "The parties" Ordinanly this was the defendant But a plaintiff may, after he has filed a plaint, but in a written statement, or it may be called for by the Court under r 9, post A Court has no authority to receive a written statement in a suit from one who is not a party, or to permit such a person to appear at the hearing (1) A thid party will not be allowed to file a statement for a plaintiff or defendant who has neglected to do so him self (2) But if the parties are present in person or by pleader, the mere fact that the defendant has not filed a written statement does not warrant the trial of the suit ex parte (3) As to the presumption of authentiety, see below (4) The corresponding section to this in the Code of 1859 was seet 120

"At or before the first hearing"—See notes to r 9, post Under the Code of 1859 the word "before" did not occur, and it was therefore held this admission of written statements on several dates was wrong (5). Written statements may now be received at any time, provided it is before the first hearing or by order of Court under rr 6 and 9. Reasonable time should be given to a defendant to file his written statement (6).

"Present"—The word formerly used was 'tender' The production of the written statement at the trial was held (7) to be the tendering under the Code of 1859 But now it would appear to be the presentation of the written statement, whenever that may be

"Written statement "-It has been said that English rules are to be upplied with discretion in this country, where a strict system of pleading has not hitherto been followed, but here, as everywhere, the first object of pleading is to inform the persons against whom the suit is directed what the chargo is that is laid against them. The principle is equally valid as applied to either party in the cause Amendments have, however, now been intro duced into the Code to secure a stricter and more accurate system of pleading Under O XIV r 3, post, the Court frames the issues according to the illegations in the plaint and written statement (1) As to the nature of a written statement, see notes to O VI r 2 The effect of a written statement may be considered from the point of view of the plaintiff or defendant. As agards the former, he has to prove his case He may, however, he dispensed from doing this in whole or in part by the admi sion of the defendant What is not admitted must be proved (2) An admission may not only operate to reheve the plaintiff in his proof, but it may shift the burden to the defendant (3) It has sometimes been supposed that no portion of a defendant's written statement can be read against him without the whole statement being read The true rule, however is this that if a man makes a qualified statement (4) you cannot use the statement against him apart from the qualification, not that if a man makes a series of independent unqualified statements my particular one of those statements cannot be used against hum (5) A written statement cannot of cour e, he read against any party swo him by whom it has been made or tho e who me bound by his admission (6) In admission by one defendant does not hand the others (7) Looking it the matter from the point of view of the defendant, the written statement is of course not evidence so is to dispense the defendant from proving the fiets stated (5) nor is it evidence in the defendant's favour, so that if a defendant admits one fact, and there by dispenses with proof of it he is not cutified to say that the plantiff has relied on his statement as evidence, and that has the defendant, is in consequence in a position to claim that the whole of it in w be read is evidence in his favour (9) Pleadings

in Indian Courts have not hitherto been construed with the same strictness as pleadings in Linghish Courts,(1) and therefore a mere omission to deny an allega tion has not always been taken as an admission of it so as to dispense the plaintiff from proof of the fact alleged (2) Stricter rules have now been intro duced (see O VIII r 5) As against the party affected his statement primarily operates by way of admission and not estoppel (3) If a party wishes to give evidence of a fact of which he became aware after he has filed his plant or written statement is the case may be he should file a written statement or supplement my written statement before the hearing (4) If have is given to file a further written statement on or before a particular date, it will not, if filed after that date, be ordered to be taken off the file if the opposite party has delayed to make an application until the trial (5) Where an additional written statement sought to be admitted was incon sistent with the original written statement, the Court said that in such cases there was a difference between an application by the plaintiff and hy the defendint. The plaintiff would not be allowed to file such a statement It allowed the filing on payment of all costs, observing, however, that the supplementary written statement would rightly be the subject of strong comment at the hearing (6) The Code, it was held, did not contemplate the filing by a plaintiff of a written statement after seeing the written statement of the defendant and by way of rejoinder thereto (7), but if 6 and 9 refer to written statements in answer to claims of set-off A written statement. whether it be called for by the Court after the first hearing or is filed by the parties under this rule at or before the first hearing need not be stamped (8)

2. The defendant must raise by his pleadings all matters New facts must be which show the suit not to be maintainable, or point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not rused, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise ussues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, fraud, limitation, release, payment, performance, or jacts showing illegality.

validity in law, or set up some affirmative case of his own, in answer to it. In the technical language of the old pleaders, it will not serve his turn to merely tracerse the allegation, he must confess and avoid Thus, if the plaintiff sets up a contract which was in fact made, it will be idle for the defendant merely to traverse (a e deny) the making of the contract, he should contess (a e admit) that he made the contract, but arold the effect of that confession by pleading the Statute of Frauds or Lamitations, or setting up that the contract has been duly performed or rescinded A defendant, however, is not bound to admit an allegation which he sceles thus to acord, or which he alleges to be bad in law He may at the same time deny its truth, so long as he makes it quite clear how much he is denying He may, indeed, take all three courses at once, the allegation may be traversed in point of fact, and objected to as had in law, and at the same time collateral matter may be pleaded to destroy its effect Any number of defences may now be pleaded together in the same action without leave, although they are obviously inconsistent" (1) A defendant may "raise by his defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, subject only to the provision" (2) contained in O VI r 16, as to striking out embarrassing matter. And a defence is not embarrassing merely because it contains inconsistent averments (3) But all these various defences must be clearly and distinctly pleaded and the facts upon which each is grounded should be stated separately As a rule each defence should form a separate The defendant must make it quite clear what line of defence he is adopting Any plea which wears a doubtful aspect will be struck out as embarrassing (4) Above all special defences of this kind must not be mixed up with traverses or insinuated into pleas which deny the facts alleged by the plaintiff (5) "The office of a traverse is to contradict, not to excuse or justify the act complained of , its object is to compel the plaintiff to prove the truth of the allegation traversed, not to dispute its sufficiency in point of law All matter in confession and avoidance, all matter justifying or excusing the act complained of must be specially and separately pleaded, so must all matters which go to show that the contract sucd on is illegal or invalid, or which, if not expressly stated, would be hkely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the preceding pleadings And no evidence of such matters can be given at the trial if they be not expressly pleaded This is only fair play " (6)

3. It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his written statement to deny generally the grounds alleged by the plaintiff, but the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, except damages

"It shall not be sufficient."-This is one of the greatest improvements

introduced by the Judiciture let. Formerly the defendant was allowed to plead what was called "the general assue," to "that he was not guilty," or 'that he never was indehted as alleged," both of which were conclusions of mixed law and fact. Now a defendant may no longer deny generally the facts alleged in the Statement of Claim. He must take each matter which is alleged against him separately, and either admit it, or deny it, or say that he does not admit it "It is not merely demal which is meant, the rule covers non adunation" as well Whether the defendant says I deny or "I do not ident," he is equally bound to deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not adont the truth (1) This is the general principle which now governs every traverse. And in order to make this general principle quite clear, special instances are given in subsequent rules (English) (2) ' In actions for a deht or liquidated demand in money, comprised in O 3, r 6 (English), a more denial of the debt shall be inadmissible" (English O 21, r 1). "In actions upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, or cheques, a defence in demal must deny some matter of fact eq the drawing, making, endorsing, eccepting, presenting or notice of dishonour of the bill or note" (English O 21, r 2) "In actions for goods bargained and sold, or sold and dehvered, the defence must deny the order or contract, the delivery, or the amount claimed, in an action for money had and received it must deny the receipt of the money, or the existence of those facts which are alleged to make such recent by the defendant, a recent to the use of the plaintiff" (English Q 21, r 3)

"Deal specifically '-What is meant by dealing specifically with an allegation of fact? It means that the party pleading must make it perfectly clear how much he adunts and how much of it he denies If he does this the Court will not quarrel with the phrase which he uses Ife must not deny en bloc everything alleged agriast him. A defendant may not now plead "that he domes specifically every allegation contained in the Statement of Claim (or plaint) ' Still, in order to deny specifically it is not necessary to write out every sentence in the Statement of Claim and traverse it in detail It is sufficient when dealing with matters of inducement or any other allegations which do not go to the gist of the action, to plead that "the defendant denies each of the allegations contained in paragraph 8" This will have the same effect as copying out the whole paragraph and constantly inserting "not" But when the pleader comes to those allegations which are of the gist of the action he must be more precise. He must plead. The defendant never agreed as alleged, ' or " never spoke or published any of the said words ' or 'never made any such representation as is alleged in paragraph 2 of the Statement of Claim '(3)

Sometimes, in order to obey the rule and to deal specifically with every allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth it is necessary for the defendant to place on the record two or more distinct traverses to one and the same allegation. Thus, if he pleads, "The d fendant never broke or entered the pluminf s close" he thereby admits that the close in question belongs to the plaintiff If he intends at the trial to deny that the plaintiff owned or possessed that close, he must say so distinctly and in a separate plea. If he wishes to raise hoth defences—ie to deny the act complained of, and also the plaintiff is title to the land—he must put on the record two separate paragraphs eg. I "The defendant never broke or entered the said close" 2 "The said close is not the close of the pluntiff" Merely to deny an allegation in terms will often be ambiguous and therefore evasive. The pleader must always unswer "the point of substance" alleged against him, otherwise his pleading will be deemed evasive (r. 19, corresponding with next rule). And, if an allegation be made against him, with details of time and place, etc., he must deay the substance of the allegation and not confine himself to denying it along with those incessential details (1)

"Each allegation of fact "—Only allegations of fact should be demed, matter of law should not be traversed. And the defendant should never traverse matter not alleged against him he should be content to answer what is lad against him in the Statement of Claim and not trouble about any other matters which the plaintiff might have, but has not raised (2). Moreover, it is no part of his duty, when drafting his defence, to anticipate what the plaintiff may hereafter allege in his reply (3).

"Except damages "—" No demal or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed, or their amount, but they shall be deemed to be put in 18500 in all cases, unless expressly admitted "(English O 21, r 4) This rule applies to damage of all kinds whether special or general and whether the alleged damage is part of the cause of action or not (4)

4. Where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plant, he must not do so erasticly, but ansurt the point of substance. Thus, if it is alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must dry that he received. And if an allegation is made with diverse circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances.

Evasion—The pleader must deal specifically with every allegation of fact made by his opponent—that is he must either admit it frankly or deal it boldly. Any half admission or half demal is evasive. Thus a defence in these words, "The terms of the arrangement were never definitely agreed upor as alleged," was held evasive. Jessel M.R., said. "The defendant is bound to deny that any agreements or any terms of arrangement were ever come to if that is what he means, if he does not mean that, he should say that the

"Point of substance"-Again, a traverse often becomes evasive if it follows too closely the precise language of the allegation traversed. Thus, in Tildesley v Harper (2) the Statement of Claim alleged that the defendant offered the plaintiff a brike of £500 The defendant pleaded, following the exact words of the Statement of Claim, that "the defendant had never offered the plaintiff a hribe of £500," which would have been true if he had offered £400 or £499, or any other sum Fry. J. held that the substance was that a hribe had been offered and that that was not fairly or substantially demed The defendant should have pleaded that he never offered "a bribe of £500 or any other sum" Leave to amend was eventually given (3)

"Along with those circumstances"-That is to say, if the plaintiff alleges that he "paid the defendant £500 at 35, Fleet Street, on March 3rd. 1904, in the presence of AB," it is an evasive traverse for the defendant to plead "The plaintiff did not pay the defendant £500 at 35, Eleet Street, on March 3rd, 1901, in the presence of A B " For he might have paid the defendant £500 on another day or in another place, or when A B was not present And these details are only "circumstances", they are not of the essence of the allegation It is sufficient and proper for the defendant to answer the point of substance and to plead "The plaintiff never paid the defendant £500 or any other sum " (1)

5. Every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specufically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the Specific denial defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability :

Provided that the Court may in its discretion require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission.

Answering opponent's pleading-The rules of O VI VIII have defined both the manner in which each party should state his own case, and also prescribe how he should answer his opponent's pleading. The main object of the latter rules (5) is " to secure that each party in turn should fully admit or clearly deny every material allegation made against him so that they may promptly arrive at an issue. With this object three general principles are declared -

1 It is not sufficient to deny generally the matters alleged by the opposite party, but each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth (O VIII r 3)

2 When a party in any pleading denies an allegation of fact in the previous pleading of the opposite party, he must not do so exasticly but answer the point of substance (O VIII r 4)

3 Every allegation of fact in any pleading shall be taken to be admitted if it is not denied specifically or by necessary impheation, or stated to be not admitted (O VIII r 5)

This rule is taken from Enghsh O 19, r 13, but the Legislature has modified the rigour of the rule by providing, in accordance with sect 58 of the Evidence Act, that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific demal, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies on it

Admissions —A defendant ought not to deny plain and acknowledged facts which it is neither to his interest not in his power to disprove (I) Where allegations are denied or not admitted, which ought, in the opinion of the Judge, to have been admitted, he may make such order as to any extra costs occasioned thereby as shall be just (English O 21, r 9) The discretion under this proviso indicates that the effect of a failure to deny in a written statement an allegation of fact in a plaint does not necessarily amount to a proof in the plaintiffs favour (2). It is in the discretion of the Court to allow or disallow an application for amendment of a plaint (3). There is no difference in effect between denying and not admitting an allegation (4). The distinction usually observed is that a party denies my matter which, if it has occurred, would have been within his own knowledge, while he refuses to admit matters which are alleged to have happened hohind his back. But whether he demis or does not admit, he must make it perfectly clear how much he disputes and how much he admits (5).

6. (1) Where in a suit for the recovery of money the defendant elaims to set off against the to be given in written plaintiff's demand any ascertaimed sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff, not exceeding the peeumary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, and both parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit, the defendant may, at the first hearing of the suit, but not afterwards unless permitted by the Court, present a written statement containing the particulars of the debt sought to be set off

(2) The written statement shall have the same effect as a plant in a cross suit so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in respect both of the original claim and of the set off but this shall not affect the lien, upon the amount decreed, of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree

This rule deals with the cross claim known as legal set off, and which is a claim or demand which the defendant in an action sets off against the claim of the plaintiff, as being his due, whereby he may extinguish the plaintiffs demand, either in whole or in part, according to the amount of the set off (!) It is to be distinguished from a plea of payment (2). The defence of payment does not admit that the demand sued upon is just, it attacks the plaintiffs claim and urges matter to defeat or at least reduce it on account of some matter connected therewith. But set off arises out of a transaction extrinsic of the plaintiffs cause of action, being a mutual independent claim. Again, while set off is the creation of law, payment is an act of the defendant's consent, express or implied (3)

There is a distinction, also, as regards the mode of pleading. A set off is a cross debt or claim, on which a separate action may be sustained. Pay ment can only he the subject of defence to another's action. Set off may be pleaded or not, at the defendant's pleasure. Fullure to do so will not bit a suit hy him for the amount of the set off, as is the case with the defence of payment. Set off must be specially pleaded, and the facts constituting it proved by the defendant as if he were himself the plaintiff to another action (4). Recoupment, which is the keeping back of something due because there is an equitable reason to withhold it, is also to be distinguished both from payment and set off. It can only extinguish the plaintiff's demand in whole or in part, and can never lead to a decree in the defendant's favour (5).

Common law did not recognize any right of set off A defendant who had any cross claim could not raise it in the plaintiff's action. He had to brigg a cross action. Legal set off is the creation of Statuts, that is, to be allowed a set off it must be shown that there is a statutory right (6) Successive but limited Statutes were enacted to remove the defect and inconvenience arising from this non necognition and consequent circuity of action and the right to plead a set off was first conferred by 2 Geo II c 22. A set off was allowed in certain cases (7) It was a defence proper to the plain tiff's action, defeating or reducing a plaintiff's claim. It was a shield and not a sword (8) It was allowed only in a limited number of cases and when established its effect was to show that the plaintiff could not recover it

Set off, however, had long been, prior to the enactment of sect 121 of the Code of 1859, recognized A rule of legal set off in India is contained in this rule which is only an amphified version of sect 121 of the Code of 1809, as that section was construed by the Indian Courts It has, however been held that that section and the section in the last Code correspond ing with the present rule only had down a rule of procedure in regard to cases of set off but were not exhaustive of those cases, and that it was not intended to take away any rights of set off, whether legal or equitable, which parties would have independently of it (1) And it is well settled that Indian Courts may allow equitable set off in cases in which Equity Courts in England allow the same, even though such eases do not fall within the language of the present rule (2) Cross claims are thus in this country limited to cases of set of (as distinguished from counterclaum) whether such set off is legal or equitable It is, however, to be observed that under this rule a set off is treated as a plaint in a cross action so that the defendant may get a decree for it, whereas, as already pointed out sot off, prior to the Judicature Act could only reduce or extinguish the plaintiff's claim, and a separate action would have had to be brought to recover the amount of any excess beyond the plaintiff s claini

In pleading a set off the defendant assumes the position of a plaintiff and is required to prove the same facts which he would be required to prove if he had brought an original action on hie demand. The plaintiff cannot, by taking a dismissal of the enit avoid an inquiry into the ments of the set off Vide post. In a suit for rent due on a molurari tenure held by the defondant, the defence was that he wise entitled to set off against the plaintiff solum a cortain suin due to hum on a decree passed by the Privy Council between the same parties. It was held that the set off could be entertained and inquired into, the decree of the Privy Council not being under execution and sect 246

of the last Code heing mapplicable to the case (3)

Equitable set off.-It has already been stated (i) that this rule does not take away any rights of equitable set off (5) which parties would have independent of it. The statutory rule of set-off is absolute in its terms, and where a case is within it a set off is given as of right, but equitable set-off. from its year nature, depends on the equities of each particular case, and therefere on the discretion of the Court It cannot be claimed as of right, and will be all swed only where the Court deems it equitable to allow it in any case,(6) though the Court will be guided in the exercise of its discretion by the decisions of the English Equity Courts, which have been recognized in this country (7) Louisable reist ff exists not only in cases of mutual delets and credits, but also where the cross demands arese out of one and the same transaction, or are so connected in their nature and circumstances as to make it inequitable that the phintiff should recover and the defendant be driven to a cross suit (8). Thus un receptained damages for partial lucach of a contract may be set off in answer to a claim for money due on that contract, so fir as it was fulfilled, as the cross demands in such a case are connected with the same transaction, and arise out of one and the same contract , (9) and m a suit for arrears of salary there has been allowed to be set off the value of goods and property damaged, lost or not accounted for, by the plaintiff (10) Where a defendant set up an agreement to the effect that the rents payable on account of hads held by the plaintiff

"Suit for the recovery of money."-Thus no set-off may be claimed in a suit for property, or for a declaratory decree or injunction, (2) nor is a suit for moveable property one for the recovery of money, even though a money value be assigned in the plaint to the property, and the decree may contain a provision of an alternative character for the payment of the money by the defendant in case of default in the delivery of the property. It has been doubted but not decided, whether a suit for an account can be held to be for recovery of money within the meaning of this section, (3) but a suit for dissolution of partnership, with a prayer that the balance due should be paid, is within the section (1) It is to be observed that there is a difference in the wording of the rule as regards the plaintiff's demand and the defendant's set off Tho latter must be of an ascertained sum. The suit, however, need not be for an ascertained sum, the words "recovery of money" including claims for unliquidated damages and mesne profits. See illustration (c) to the rule (5) Even in the case of a set off not falling within the provisions of this section, the claims must both be for money, as is indicated by the terms, O XX r 19, post

"Claims to set off"-A defendant cannot be permitted to carry on two suits for the same demand at the same time and using a demand in set off is a bar to a subsequent suit for that demand A defendant may, however, it has been submitted, claim a set off of a demand during the pendency of a suit for the same demand (6)

"Ascertained sum "-The word 'debt was used in the Code of 1809 It was held restricted to an ascertained sum and to exclude unliquidated damages and mesne profits as being damages (7) Under the last and present Codo the matter is clear, both from the use of the word ascertained" and the addition of illustration (c) to the section The sum sought to be set off underg

this rule must be a sum ascertained. that is, liquidated, and not damages undetermined.(1) such as a houndated amount due under a hond.(2) or a debt payable according to an award (3) The sum to be set off must be ascertained before the set off is claimed, and it is not sufficient that it may be ascertained on inquiry (4) The claim is sufficiently certain if it is capable of being reduced to a certainty by simple calculation (5) A sum decreed is ascertained and may be set off (6) No decree by way of set off can be awarded to a defendant for a sum to be ascertained on a settlement of accounts, even though the result of the suit shows that nothing is due to the plaintiff (7). There is nothing in this rule to restrict the set-off to claims in respect of the same matter which forms the subject of the plaintiff's suit. The rule allows a set off of every ascertained sum of money, and no restriction should be placed on that right which is not to be found in the section itself Though the restrictions on equitable set off of unascertained sums are proper, there is no reason, as there is no authority, for grafting them on to the law in regard to ascertained sums (8) While it is a general principle of set off at law that the amount claimed should bo certain and ascertained, and that an unbiquidated demand may not bo set off even if it should arise on the same contract on which the plaintiff's demand is based, this is not so in the case of equitable set off. This may be allowed in the case of unliquidated damages, that is, an amount which can only be ascertained by the decision of the Court (9) where the respective claims of the parties arise out of one and the same transaction (10)

"Legally recoverable "-Set off is allowed to prevent cross actions It was not intended to give new rights, except to the extent of giving facilities for the enforcing of rights which are already enforceable in an action, and it has always been accordingly held that a set-off can only be successfully pleaded when an action could have been maintained for the same debt (1) As the sum must be legally recoverable, a demand arising out of a transaction which is legally invalid cannot be the subject of a set-off. A defendant there fore cannot recover in respect of a claim without cause of action, (2) or barred under seet 11, ante (3), or O II r 2, or by the Lumitation Act, (4) or based on a decree me spable of being enforced. (5) or in respect of an infant's debt (6) In a suit for arrears of rent the amount of a new road eess paid by the defendant was held not to have been payable by the plaintiff under the terms of the lease as a prior income tax was, and therefore not recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff, and thus not liable to be set off (7) In short, the claim sought to be set off must be one upon which a separate action could have been maintained The money set off must be of course recoverable from the plan tiff, not from any one else, and it must be due to the defendant, who cannot set up a right subsisting in a third party Tho defendant's right of set off of a demand against a person is not affected by the circumstance that the suit is brought not by that person but by an assignee of his This is so, even where the assignment is by a sale in execution of a decree against him (8) A cannot set off agruist a claim made by B, in respect of separate dealings between him and A a debt due from a firm consisting of a father and two sons, one of whom is B (9) Neither can a defendant set off against a claim of money any portion of an amount 10 respect of which the defendant, jointly with another, not a party to the suit, can claim contribution from the plaintiff. (10) Where in a suit by s company in liquidation it was argued that the defendant's claim was not legally secoverable as his remedy was only proof in liquidation, where probably he would recover not the whole of the ascertained sum but only a dividend it was held that the words legally recoverable" had no reference to the ability of the debtor to pay the demand in full, and that a sum was legally recoverable though in the result the creditor must be satisfied with a dividend (11) claimed to be set off must not exceed the hmits of jurisdiction, the excess of such amount over the plaintiff's claim, for which the defendant may ask a decree in his favour, not being material in the question of juris diction (I) And where a Court has two different pecuniary jurisdictions, the jurisdiction referred to in this rule will be that in which the enit is being taken cognizance of Thus, where a Subordinate Judge, with unhmited pecuniary jurisdiction, was invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and in the exercise of that jurisdiction took eognizance of a suit, it was held that the claim for set-off in it, of an amount exceeding the pecumiary limit of the Small Cause Court jurisdiction, could not be inquired into by him (2) A question might arise whether a Court could entertain a set off, a claim for which, though within its pecuniary jurisdiction, was otherwise not within it. It has been held that the rule does not refer to material jurisdiction in any way, or contemplate a case in which a smt for the amount claimed to be set off is beyond the jurisdiction on account of its nature, as may be the case in some Provinces as regards claims for amounts for rent of agricultural lands (3) It has, however, been also held generally that no Court can entertain a set off if it would not have had jurisdiction to entertain a suit, if one had been brought to recover the mone) sought to he set off (4) And see last paragraph

Effect of set off—The set-off is to have the effect of a plaint (5) in a winch relates colely to the plaintiff's claim. It is not affected by anything which relates colely to the plaintiff's claim. It is not necessary that the plain tiff's demand should actually exist. Thus the defendant may deny the plaintiffs claim, and also plead a cet off and may obtain a decree for it, although no sum may be found due to the plaintiff (6). And if a certain amount is found due to the plaintiff but a greater sum is found due to the defendant, a decree will be mide in favour of the defendant for the recovery of the halance (7). And it has been held that the same rule applies in the case of a set off which is not within the purview of this rule (8).

In appeal will be to the same Court as if the sum had been demanded in a separate suit (9). So long as set-off was deemed a mere defence the plaintiff could it my stage of the suit put in end to it by putting in end to the suit itself. It fell with the action to which it was an adjunct. However, as affirmative relief can now be given on a claim for set off, the plaintiff cannot, by refusing to proceed with the cive, defeat the defendant's right to recover under his set off [1]. As to hen, [2] the rule seems to assume that it is usual for a decree to make costs payable to the pleader instead of to the party [3].

Rules relating to written statements—"I his clause is now, see notes to other rules of same order. Court fees must be paid on set off claimed in written statement (i). Where the case was not strictly one of set off under the former section, so as to make applicable to it the provisions of the third paragraph of that section (corresponding with the second clause of this rule), it was held that the written statement need not be stamped as a plaint (6)

9. No pleading subsequent to the uritten statement of a is.

Subsequent pleadings set off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court and upon such terms as the Court thinks fit, but the Court may at any time require a written statement or additional written statement from any of the parties and fix a time for presenting the same

"No pleading," etc —And to seet 112 of the last Code shortened and remodelled. This rule corresponds to seet 123 of the Code of 1859. By r. 1, ande, written statements must be filed before or at the first hearing, by which is meant that they must be filed before the parties have entered upon their case (6). This is subject to r. 6. Accordingly an application to file a supple mental written statement after the case had begun was refused (7). Where a written statement was improperly admitted, but without prejudice to the opposite party, the Court refused to interfere in appeal (8).

"Court may at any time require".—This may be done at any time In the Code of 1859 occurred the words "before final judgment' and it was accordingly held to mean that written statements could be called for only by the first Court and before judgment (9) The written statement may be called for from either plaintiff or defendant The Court was held justified in calling for a written statement which did not add to or vary the plaintiff s claim, but

Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non appearance

Appear and answer, the parties shall be in

Appear on attendance at the Court house on present of attendance at the Court house in person of defendant to appear and hy their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court

"Day fixed '—This refers to the day fixed for the first hearing of the suit (1). An appearance under the Code is not the same thing, as appearance is it used to be in the Supreme Court and is now in the High Court where the English mode of entering appearance by attorney is recognized and according to the practice of the High Court there is poser to order a case to est down at once, in the general case list if the defendant enters appearance by his attorney before the time for appearance fixed in the summons has expired. In any case a Court could by consint and on the application of the defendant issue a new summons altering the day for appearance (2). When however deshing with the question of appearance as that term is used in the Code for the purpose of determining whether the proximons in this Order apply an objection by the defendant before the day like do the hearing to the plantiff's application for attachment before judgment is not an appearance on that date (3).

Application of these provisions—These provisions are from their very nature and language appheable to suits in their initial stage and not to proceedings taken in execution of decrees made in those suits. It was however, at one time erroneously considered that sect 647 of the C de (now 141) apphead to execution proceedings as being proceedings of a inscellaneous character and by virtue of that section these provisions were so fir as was practicable unid applicable to such proceedings. In order to overrule such decisions sect 647 was amended by Act VI of 1892 by the addition of an Explanation declaring that that section did not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits. The execution, it was held that there was nothing in the Code as so amended which authorized a Court to apply at the stage of execution any of the procedure enacted in the corresponding Chapter of the last Code (1) But that though this was so the Court might, where necessary, act under the inherent power it possesses to make such just orders as are necessary for the proper disposal of the work given to it (2)

Appearance.-The word "appear" must be interpreted in the same sense in all the following rules as in other parts of this Code in which it occurs such as O XVII 1 2, post,(3) and whether the plaintiff or defendant is spoken of (4) What then is appearance? If there is none, the judgment is ex parte It has been said that in most eases the question whether a decree is ex parte or not is a question of fact (5) It is necessary, however, to ascer tain the law governing those facts O IX r 1 indicates what is meant by appearance, namely, the actual attendance in the Court house of the party in person or by pleader or recognized agent, who, under O III r 1, must be duly appointed to act on his behalf, or by a eo party under O I r 12 Under the terms of O III r 1, an appearance by a recognized agent is equivalent to an appearance in person, unless the Court directs personal appearance Plain tiffs must all be ropresented by the same pleader, or set of pleaders, and cannot he severally represented by different pleaders (6) Defendants can, of course, be severally ropresented, though where such several ropresentation is unnecessary, as where the interests are not in conflict, the Court will not allow more than one set of costs Sect 64 of the last Code, read with Form No 117 of the Fourth Schedule of that Code, explained, it was held, the nature of the defendant's appearance in obedience to the summens to appear and susner He was to appear in person or by a duly authorized pleader, duly in structed and able to answer all material questions, or who shall be accompanied by some other person (which includes a recognized agent) able to ansucr all such questions He was further given notice that in default of his appearance—that 1°, appearance in either of the ways specified—the suit would be determined in his absence, that is, under this Chapter of the last Code Thus, the appear ance mentioned in that Chapter meant attendance in person or hy an authorized co party or by a pleader "duly instructed," etc or by a recognized agent who intended to appear and did in fact appear for the party, whether he was able or not to answer all material questions (7) The test of whether a defendant has or has not "appeared" is whether such of the requirements of the summons as relate to appearance have or have not been complied with (8) On this principle it is held that when a pleader attends who is not duly instructed in the suit he does not represent the defendant who in such case does not appear (1) Inasmuch as appearance is attendance in the Court house on the day fixed for hearing, it is clear that what is done before the day fixed in the summons and that the mere filing of a valadiumania is not appearing in person or by pleader, (2) nor is an 'appearance," in the technical sense as used on the original side of the Court, by the entry of the name of the atterney on the record, nor was there appearance where the defendant had filed valadiumania and objected to attach ment issuing before judgment, but did not appear as directed by the summons, nor on a further date when the case was decided (3) Nor is merely putting in a written statement, but when the case comes on not attending in person or by pleader an annexance (4)

Nextly, the personal attendance at the day of hearing must be in accordance with law If a person is ordered to attend in person appearance can only be effected in this way, and if be does not, but sends a pleader, he will be considered absent, and there is no appearance See O IX r 12 post (5) If there be no such directions be may appear either in person or by a co-plaintiff or co defendant under O 1 r 12 or by a pleader or recognized agent under They must however represent him and therefore the appearance of an unauthorized pleader is not an appearance by the party (6) There is of course no difficulty when there is no actual attendance by any of these persons nor indeed, where there is attendance except in the cases to which reference will be made. If a party attends in person or by pleader there is appearance, though he may neither have filed a written statement (7) nor made a verbal one (8) If the Court has refused to receive a written state ment but the pleader attends when issues are settled and cross examines witnesses there is an appearance (9) It has even been held that where a decree 19 passed on a solchnamah and the defendant alleges that it is a forgery and that she had no notice of the suit it is not ex parte (10) But this has been dissented from it being held that the defendant is entitled to go behind the decree and to show that it is in fact ex parte and that the firt that the decree appears to be based on a compromise impugned as a forgery does not mile sect 108 (now O IX r 13) post mapplicable (11) The appearance more over is to answer and if an application by a party who attends for leave to be heard is rejected and the defendant is not heard then the judgment is exparte (12) Where both parties appeared and the case was none through in their presence and nothing remained to be done except to hear arguments, the case was held not to be one which could be dealt with as for default of appearance (1)

Contest has mainly arisen where either the party or his pleader or recog mized agent does actually attend in court, but applies for an adjournment, and, when the adjournment is refused, withdraws from court So far as these provisions are concerned, the only question is appearance or non appearance If the party has appeared in either of the ways specified, viz in person or by authorized co party, or hy authorized pleader "duly instructed and able to answer," etc., or by a recognized agent who intends to appear and does in fact appear for the party, then he has appeared, and it is immaterial for what purpose he has appeared or what action he has taken on such appearance If, therefore, a party is present in person and personally applies for an adjournment, be has appeared, the purpose for which he appeared, or the action which he took on appearance, 18 immaterial (2) Appearance, however, by a pleader does not, as in the case of a party, mean mere presence He must also be duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. Where, therefore, the party is absent, and an application for adjournment is made on his behalf by a pleader, who has no other instructions, and whose functions are at an end when the adjournment is refused, in that case the party has not appeared If, therefore, the pleader in such case retires after an unsuccessful application for adjournment the decree passed is ex parte (3) In a recent case, after the plain tiff's case had been closed and the defendant's case part heard, counsel for the defendant applied for an adjournment, mainly on the ground that two of his witnesses had not arrived and this was granted, but he was warned that if they did not appear on the following day any application for a further adjournment must be supported by proper materials. The was present on the following day, but without the two witnesses and his application for a further adjournment was refused on the ground that no proper reasons for it had been made out On this he withdraw, and the case was then decided on its ments. When he afterwards applied to have the decree set used as ex parte it was submitted that at the adjourned hearing he had not appeared but had only as a bed for a further a hourmment (1) and that there fore sect 157 of the last Code (now represented by O XIII r 2) become applicable (2) It was held that the Court had no power to make an order under sect 108 of the last Code (now represented by O IV r 13) combined with sect 157 of the last Code and that his remedy was an appeal against the refusal of his application for further adjournment (3)

Lastly there is the case in which the party being absent the recognized a, ntis present If the latter accompanies a pleader, who applies for an adjourn m nt but who is otherwise uninstructed then it is a question of fact whether the agent is able to answer all material questions in which case the party must be deemed to appear by the pleader. In such a case the require ments of the summons as to appearance are as fully satisfied as if the party had appeared in person and applied for an adjournment and equally in such a case the nurpose of the appearance or the action taken on appearance is immaterial If however the party being absent neither the pleader applying for adjournment nor any person accompanying him whether a recognized a_ont or not is able to answer then apart from O III r 1 there is no appear ance within this rule and the only remaining question is whether the party appears by his recognized agent under the former rule. That is a question of fact. The more presence of the agent is not necessarily an appearance of the party. It must be determined whether he intended to appear and did in fact appear for the party in the exercise of his power under O III r 1 ante (4) Where a defendant did not appear and it was alleged that he was insane and the Judge struct off the case it was held that I e should not have done so but ought to have made the inquiry contemplated in Act XXXV of 1858 (5) summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the dat fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

"May make an order that the suit be dismissed."-If the rlambf has omitted to pay the court-fee by accident or the like, the Court may, on his application, direct the issue of a fresh summons. If it does not, there is no other course open but to dismis the suit, or the Court may dismiss the suit it once, leaving the plaintiff to apply under r 4, post. The rule applies not merely where there is a single defendant, but also where one of several defendants has not been served, for the suit is incomplete, and cannot be heard without notice to all the defendants. Where, however, in the latter case no objection was previously taken, the Court declined to entertain it on special appeal (1) The suit may be dismissed whether the summons was that orizinally usued or that reashed on account of non ervice of the original one (2) But in no case should the case he da po ed of before the day fixed for hearing (3) In the under mentioned case the Court was disposed to think though the cale wis dealt with on the merits that an order under the corresponding former ection was not appealable (4). If the court fee for serving the summons on a defendant newly added by the Court is not paid, the suit according to the Bombia High Court should be dismissed altogether even as ignist the original defendant but if it is proceeded with and decreed azamit him and he do s not take that objection on appeal, he cannot raise it for the tirst time on special appeal (5). The Allahabid High Court appears to have taken a different vi w (6) holding that m such a case the suit should be dismi-d guest those defendants only en whom the summons could not be ered but that if the suit is by mustake dismissed as against the original defendants also to word impostice the dismissal against them should be held to have been ordered under this rule Proviso — The rick contemplate is detendint appearing before errie of the summons. In the under mentioned case (7) the Court stated that it was not necessity to decade whether if a plaintiff were merely to lodge a plantial data no proceedings, up not a zerous a defendant, the latter in such a case would have a right to appear — but that where as in that case, a plaintiff, if it all process of arrest, brought the defendant before the Court, then he had a right to appear at the hearing of the case, although no summer had been served upon him.

3. Where neither party appears when the suit is called a where neither party for hearing, the Court may make an order that appears, suit to be dis the suit be dismiss.

"Called on for hearing "—The parties are bound to attend from the timo the Court opens, and must be in attendance when the case is called on for hearing, and, if absent at that time, they will be treated as not appearing (1). The Court is not bound to writ for any party until it is about to close for the dry, or even till the pleader for the party can find it convenient to attend on account of his engagement in another Court, as, if this were done, Courts would find it difficult to get through their work (2). The subsequent day referred to in sect. 98 of the last Code was that to which the first hearing is adjourned, (3) but the day fixed for hearing after a remand on appeal was held to be within the uncaning of those words (1). The reference to adjournment has now been omitted because this matter is sufficiently covered by the

"Neither party appears"—It does not apply when a pitty is present, but has omitted to serve a person with a notice of sordered by the Court is not a non-pipearance (s.

Shall be dismissed—In cases where the Court does not otherwise direct, dismissed is the only consequence, and the provise relates to the postponing of the case, and not to the making of any final order in it (6). Where neither party appears on the day fixed for the hearing of a sint, an order striking the case off the file is illegal, the only order that can be passed in the circumstances being that of dismissal (7). The rejection of an application of the ic-pondent, asking that security for costs may be taken from the appellant on the non-appearance of both the parties, has been considered, by virtue of the provisions of sect-617 (now 111) a dismissal under the section which this rule replaces (8)

"Fresh suit."—Applying the principle cinbodied in this rule, if a suit redismissed by an order purpoiting to be made under this section before the day fixed for hearing on failure to deposit talabana, this irregularity on the part of the Court does not deprive the plaintiff of his right to bring a new suit under this section (2)

"Satisfies the Court"—Each question of this kind must be dealt with, not according to any hard and fast general rule, but according to all own particular circumstances (3)

"Set aside dismissal"—When a suit has been dismissed for default, the plaintiff has neglected to make an application within thirty days, ther can be ne review of judgment under sect 114, post (1). A Judge, when restorm a suit, has no junisdiction to pass at that time any order as to the general cost of the suit (5). There is no appeal from an order setting aside the dismissl and appenting a day for proceeding with the suit (6). But where such an order has been set aside on appeal, and the last order has been reversed by the High Court, the proceedings of the first Court and the decree passed by it are invalidated on the ground that as an effect of the reversal of the order lestoring the suit, there were no proceedings in Court at the time of the passing of the decree in which such decree could be passed (7).

It is however to be noted now that under O VIII r 5 nvery fact not denied is taken to be admitted, though under that rule such admission is not necessarily equivalent to a proof (2)

The remedies open to a defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed, and who contends that the Court should not have so proceeded are either to apply under O IX r 13 (formerly sect 108), post, or, to appeal from the ex marte decree, under sect 96 Under O IX r 13, by which a summary remody is given, the complament must satisfy the Court not merely that the proof required by this rule was not given, but that in fact the summons was not duly served, or that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing Where a defendant appeals from an ex patte decree, it is sufficient, in the first instance to establish that in the Court which passed that decree the necessary proof of service of summons was not given It is not incumbent on the appellant to show that the summons was in fact not duly served (3)

In construing an order alleged by one side and denied by the other to be an order under this rule, the order will be considered as one under it il, apart from the incre description which the Court gives of its action, and apart from the actual fact of the plaintiff's appearance or non appearance, the real meaning and substance of the Court's action is, that it dismisses the suit on the view, whether right or wrong, that the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear (6). It was formerly considered (7) that the Chapter in which the section corresponding to the rule appeared, applied to execution proceedings, but this was subsequently held not to be so, having regard to the change made in 1892 in sect 617, corresponding with sect 111, gost (8). The Court refused the application, and the pleader for the plaintiff thereupon intimated that he had no further instructions to appear, and the suit was dismissed Subsequently an application was made under sect 103 (this rule) to set aside the order of dismissal On objection by the defendant that masmuch as the dis missal was under sect 158 (O XVII r 3) the remedy of the plaintiff was his way of an application for review -Hold, that the suit was dismissed under sect 102 (last rule) read with sect 157 (O XVII r 2) and that the application was maintainable under sect 103 the present rule (8) And generally if time is given to do an act and it is not performed, O XVII r 3 applies, otherwise r 2 of the latter Order See notes to these two rules, post Seet 38 of Act XV of 1882 did not preclude a plaintiff, whose suit had been dismissed for default. from applying under this rule to have the order of dismissal set aside two separate remedies under different enactments If he applied for a new trial under sect 38 he had to do so in eight days, if he applied under this rule, he had to do so in thirty days (9) The rule applies to proceedings before the

"Reasonable cause"-This must be determined according to the facts of each particular case See notes to r 13, post (4) Where when his suit 18 dismissed for default of appearance under r 8, the plaintiff applies for its restoration, the defendant cannot contest the application in limine as one which cannot be entertained at all under this rule by showing that at the time of the dismissal there was an appearance by the plaintiff, but as an answer to the application on the merits, the defendant can raise the conten tion that the plaintiff was not prevented from appearing, because, in fact, he did appear (5)

Appeal -If the planniff successfully applies under this rule no appeal hes from the order directing the suit to be readmitted, (6) though under the last Code an appeal was held to be against an order rejecting an application under sect 588 clause (8) of that Code, and an appeal is given by O XLIII r I (c) But it is not every order dismissing an application which is open to appeal, but only au order rejecting an application to have the dismissal of a suit set aside (7) decision (1) In this case a suit was dismissed for default under r 8 on nonappearance by a plaintiff whose death was not known to the Court. His son applied under r 9, and an order was made setting aside the dismissal. The respondent applied for revision under seet 115, and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner reversed that order and on review confirmed the reversal on the ground that the order dismissing the suit was proper under r 8 and that the application by the appellant (the son of the deceased plaintiff) had not been within time, and that O 22, r 3 only applied to a pending suit. The Privy Council held that the rulings of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner were vitiated by applying to a dead man rules which referred only to a defaulter, and that the order setting aside the dismissal was correct, and that "an abuse of the

not ex parte if the defendant has once appeared, it was held that there was no ground for so limiting the meaning of the words of the last Code and that a decree is ex parte if it was made at an adjourned hearing in the absence of the defendant, whether the defendant has or has not appeared at an earlier stage of the case. The present rule therefore applies to every case in which a decree is passed ex parte, either by reason of his non appearance at the first or at an adjourned hearing (1) The former section was held to apply to proceedings under Ch VII of the Presidency Small Causo Courts Let,(2) and to execution proceedings where the order amounts to a decree under sect 47, ante (3)

The rule, moreover, is not limited to the case of a sole defendant, or, when there are several defendants, to eases where none of them have appeared (4). The fact that an order under r 7 has been made against a defendant and has not been appealed against, is no objection to an application being made by him under this rule (5). And it has been held that the fact that an appeal from an exparte decree is pending will not preclude the defendant (against whom the decree was passed) from applying under this rule for an order to set it saide (6). Sect 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) does not apply to an exparte decree. An application to set aside such a decree passed by a P S C C falls within this rule (7). Satisfaction of an exparte decree does not disentitle a judgment debtor from applying to a Court to set it saide (8). Neither this rule not any other portion of the Chapter of the last Code in which this rule appeared applied to execution proceedings (9). Not does the rule apply where the case has been dismissed not for default by non appearance, but for semething clse, such as cases falling under O XVII r 3, post (10).

"Ex parto "-A decree is ex parte when the defendent does not appear Is to when a defendant is deemed to have appeared, see notes to r 1, ante (1) Court has jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decreo if it is in fact ex parte If one of the parties alleges that it is ex parte and the other denies it, the Court must investigate the question though the word purports to show the contrury (2) When a defendant seeks to set aside a decree on the grounds mentioned in this rule, the fact that the decree appears on the face of it to be based upon a petition of compromise which is impugned as a forgery, does not make the rule nuappheable. The defendant is cutifled to go behind the decree and to show that it is in fact ex parte (3) And he can apply under O XVII + 1 to invite the Court to reconsider its decision in the light of facts subsequently discovered (4) Where a defendant does appear there is no ex parte decree in the strict sense This rule contemplates cases of ex parte proceedings strictly and properly so, and therefore not such as are made under O XI r 21, post (5) The expression 'passed ex parte' in sect 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court let means a deerce " passed ex parte against a defendant, and does not include cases dismissed for default (6)

"Defendant"—The Alahabad High Court have in one case held that where is defendant against whom a decree has been passed at parte for default of appearance dues his legal representative cannot apply under this rule (7). But the Calcutta High Court has and it is submitted rightly held that he can (8). The case is now covered by the principle enacted in sect 146. But it has been held that where the defendant dies after at parte decree his representatives curnot upply to have it set aside unless they have been brought on the record (9). As to the procedure in the case of the non attendance of one or more of soveral defendants see: 11 and notes thereto.

"May apply "-Under Art 161 Schedule II of the Limitation Act, the application should be made within thirty days from the date of executing any process for enforcing judgment. The burden of proof is of course on the applicant (10). The very object, however, of an application under this rule is to show that evidence on the record cannot be used against the petitioner on the ground that it was taken behind his back and therefore if the applicant makes out a primal facie case the opposite party must rebut it by evidence taken word "decree" referred to is the decree described in the first sentence of the section, viz the decree passed ex parte against the defendant who has not appeared, and that the words "shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit" meant that a day is to be appointed for proceeding with the suit so far as the defendant, who has applied to the Court under the provisions of this section, is concerned (1) No difficulty arose where there was only one defendant, or where, if there were several defendants, an application was successfully made by all of them In such cases the whole decree against the defendant, or all the defendants, was set aside The question alose where there were several defendants, and one or more of several (but not all) applied successfully, whether the whole decree was or should be set aside against all the defendants, or only the decree so far as it affected the defendant or defendants who applied In this connection two sets of circumstances required consideration, (a) where an application was made by one or more defendants to set aside a decree which had been made ex parte against all defendants, none having appeared, (b) where a similar application was made in a case where some of the defendants had appeared and contested the suit and some had not appeared, and a decree was passed against all the defendants. Any interpretation of the section which led to the conclusion that a Court must in all cases set aside the decree against all defendants, or could not in any case do so, led to difficulties Some of the defendants might not object, and in fact might have no ground for objecting to the deciee, and the Court would not be justified in such case in reopening the whole suit (2) On the other hand, if the Court's power was strictly limited to setting aside the decree as against the defendant who applied, difficulties equally arose (3) For instance, the relief given might be toint and indivisible

It was therefore hold that though "decree" meant "uhole decree," and

thus the Court had power to set asido the whole decree a minst all defendants. the Court was not bound in every case to set aside the decree against all the defendants (1) It would do so where the decree was really one decree pro coding upon a common ground (2) and was indivisible. (3) but it might refuse to do so where the decree, though nominally one, really consisted of several decrees against several parties (4) Where the question involved in a case was whether the lightly of the defendants was munt or several, and in such case the ex parte decree was set aside, on the application of some of several defen dants the entire decree was set aside (5) Similar conclusions were arrived at by Aikman, J. in whose opinion "decree" meant the ex parte decree referred to in the opening words of the section, and who held that when the decree was one and indivisible it must be set aside as a whole or not at all and that the Court must be assumed to have the power to set aside the whole decree if either the decree was from its nature one and indivisible, or if in order to give to the defendants against whom an ex wirte decree has to be pronounced the relief to which they are entitled, it must be set aside as a whole (6) The Calcutta High Court held that the Court might set aside the whole decree even where one or more of the defeedants had appeared and contested the suit, while in the case of the remaining defendant or defendants the decree had been massed or parte (7) A contrary view was taken in the Bombay High Court . (8) and Stanley, J. and Burkitt, J. in the Allahabad High Court (9) reserved their opinions on the point

The proper rule is that now enacted by the provise viz that relief is ordinarily to be given only to the party who is entitled to and applies for it. If, however, in order to give such relief or for other purpo it is necessity to set aside the dicree as igainst others also, this will be done as in cases where

41 I Lua Malie Har Kubau Das irgen, at L. 30 3 1 word "decree" referred to is the decree described in the first sentence of the section, viz the decree passed ex parte against the defendant who has not appeared , and that the words " shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit ' meant that a day is to be appointed for proceeding with the suit so far as the defendant, who has applied to the Court under the provisions of this section is concerned (1) No difficulty arose where there was only one defendant or where, if there were several defendants, an application was successfully made by all of them In such cases the whole decree against the defendant, or all the defendants, was set aside The question alose where there were several defendants, and one or more of several (hut not all) applied sneecssfully, whether the whole decree was or should be set aside against all the defendants, or only the decree so far as it affected the defendant or defen dants who applied In this connection two sets of circumstances required consideration, (a) where an application was made by one or more defendants to set aside a decree which had been made ex parte against all defendants, none having appeared, (b) where a similar application was made in a case where some of the defendants had appeared and contested the suit and some had not appeared, and a decree was passed against all the defendants Any interpretation of the section which led to the conclusion that a Court must in all cases set aside the decree against all defendants, or could not in any case do so, led to difficulties Some of the defendants might not object, and in fact might have no ground for objecting to the decree, and the Court would not be justified in such case m reopening the whole smt (2) On the other hand, if the Court's power was strictly limited to setting aside the decree as against the defendant who applied, difficulties equally arose (3) For instance, the relief given might be joint and indivisible

It was therefore held that though "decree" meant "whole decree," and prepared to put in a written statement does not warrant the trial of a suit expante. The Judge should in that case ascertain what are the matters in issue by an examination of the defendant under this rule (1). The object of this examination is not to take evidence or to ascertain what is to he the evidence in the case, but to see whether a cause of action exists, what are the matters in dispute, and, if necessary, to allow an amendment of the pleadings (2). Under the Code of 1859, provision was made for the examination of three persons, viz the party, pleader, or companion of either R 2 now excludes the pleader, though r 4 contemplates his examination. Under the Code of 1859, the examination was (unless the pleader was the person examined) to be ou oath or affirmation. But as this provision has been omitted, the examination may now take place without eath or affirmation.

R 4 provides for the appearance of a party, not to give evidence in the ordinary way, but to put the Court in possession of information necessary to the framing of issues or other points in the conduct of the case. The power given is discretionary, the intention of the section being to enable the Court not only to get obscure points cleared up by obtaining information from either of the parties (3) but also, if possible, to get admissions so as to narrow down the 188ues (4) If the party does not appear, the Court may pass a decice (a) against the defaulting party, but this east only he done if the pleader has pre viously thereto refused or been unable to answer a material (6) question (1) If the plaintift is in default the Court may dismiss his suit If it be the defendant, the question arises whether the Court can or should decree the plaintiff's suit without any evidence in support of his claim (8) Apparently the Court has power to do so (9) The Court, however, is not bound to pies a decree, it may pass any order it thinks fit. The amended section substitutes " pronounce judgment " for "pass a decice " Apparently, honever the two phrases are meant to mtend the same thing R is of a penal charictir, and it is therefore incumhent on the Court which professes to act under it to take care that the contingency contemplated by it has in fact occurred (10)

ORDER XI

Discovery and Inspection

1. In any sunt the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the some parties. Court may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is lequired to unswer. Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same party without an order for that purpose. Provided also that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the suit shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross examination of a witness.

Discovery—The provisions as to discovery have been remodelled in conformity with the present English Rules, and the English decisions will be more closely applicable. This is 0.31 r. 1. It does not apply to rent suits in Bengal [sect 148] clause (a). Act VII of 1885]. The words through the Court have been omitted. Other amendments are noted post according to the folium English practice actions were instituted to obtain discovery. Under the present practice these can be arrely necessary (I). Order 31 of the Judicature Act Rules following the extended principles of the Court of Chancery, now gives power to the Court in all suits to order discovery in aid of the action (2). This part of the Court of all suits to order discovery in and of the action (2). This part of the Code closely follows the English Rules. The main object of administering interrogatories is to save expense by obtaining admissions from the opposite party (3). A plaintiff may interrogate with a view to obtain information or admissions in support of his our case and this right extends with proper qualifications not only to his original case but also to any answer which he has to make to the defending a case.

But the right is always subject to the qualification that the interrogatories must be directed to a case on which the plaintiff has already determined and to which he has committed himself He cannot be allowed to put fishing ques tions in order to try whether he can discover any flaw in the defendant's case or suggest any answer to it (1) Discovery is not limited to giving the party a knowledge of that which he does not already know, but includes the getting an admission of anything which he has to prove on an issue between himself and his opponent, (2) to facilitate proof or save expense, (3) and to diminish the burden of proof (4) So one party may be asked as to any admissions he may have made tending to support his opponent's cause of action (5) And discovery may be had of the names of persons to make them parties, and the names and securities of prior incumbrances (6) The interro gatory must be as to facts, and must not ask for conclusions of law, inference of facts or construction of a document (7) In short, a party is entitled to discovery of every fact which makes out his own case or shows that he is in the right and this includes specific aflegations in the nature of a replication to an anticipated defence. He is not however, entitled to discovery of matters which support his opponent's case or show that his opponent is right. It has been held that he cannot ask the opposite party by what evidence he intends to support his case (8) But in a suit for the recovery of the amount on a hundi alleged to have been drawn and accepted by the defendant in consideration of a loan, it has been recently held in the Calcutta High Court that a party is entitled to interrogate on facts directly in issue in the pleadings and that therefore the defendant was entitled to discovery of all necessary details, including the names and addresses of the persons by whom it was presented (9) In this country it was formerly held that interrogatories viswed as machinery for eliciting facts bearing upon issues arising in suits were intended only to have a limited operation (1) So though English authorities establish that a plaintiff may interrogate the defeudant in order that he may know what case he has to meet-not the evidence but what the defence is-such interrogatories are really framed to anticipate or supply defects of pleading. But the system of procedure in this country, it was held, was different. Two modes were held to be specially provided for meeting the difficulty in question. If the pleading was too vague the Court might require a further and fuller written statement under the section corresponding with O VIII r 9 The other method referred to was that provided by the Code in the settlement of issues. Interrogatories should not in such a case, it was held, be resorted to in this country (2) So again it was held that sect 131 of the last Code indicated that in a case falling within it a party should proceed not by way of interrogatories but according to the procedure had down in that section, and that the Code did not contem plate that a party should be compelled to gue discovery of documents by means of interrogatories or otherwise the relevancy of which was denied (3) Further particulars may now be demanded under O VI r 5, but there can be no doubt that the framers of the present Code intended to approximate the two systems as far as possible

Time for delivery of interrogatories -The former Codo contained the words " at any time which have now been omitted In England a plaintiff is hardly over allowed discovery hofore statement of claim for from the earliest times the Court has set its face against allowing discovery for the purpose of fishing out a case (4) and this must always be so under the Code where a suit is not instituted until after the presentation of a plaint (5) In Common Law actions the proper time for discovery was not until after defence for until then it was not usually possible to say what was really material But a plaintiff has been allowed to interrogate before defence, and in the Chancery Division it is common practice to allow a plaintiff discovery before defence (6) And the Court has a discretion to allow this under this rule The same principles which prohibit discovery before the plaintiff has stated his ease apply to a defendant. As a rule therefore in England a defendant will not be allowed general discovery before putting in his defence (7) and this was laid down as an absolute rule in all cases by the second paragraph of the former This portion of the former provise has been omitted and the English practice will be followed The same procedure may be adopted in miscellaneous proceedings after decree Interrogatories as to accounts pending or to make the judgment available, or to find out how the property in cases of mesne profits has been managed, have been allowed, and no doubt will be admitted under the Code (1)

Leave -Application should be made on petition in Chambers, the order being that the plaintiff be allowed to interrogate (2) It was held to be the duty of the Court to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate, but not to determine at that stage what questions the opposite party should be compelled to answer (3) But see now next rule . In giving leave the Court, as a rule, decides nothing as to the specific interrogatories but only that there is a case for interrogating the party, that the interrogatories may possibly be relevant, that their genuine character is not improper, and that their administration is not sought for the mere purpose of annoyance Where the party on being served refuses to answer them the Court enters upon a considered adjudication under r 11 post, and the resulting order may be enforced under r 21 The grant of leave to one party to dehver interrogatories to another does not amount to an order requiring the other party to answer them, for that party may perhaps have good ground for refusing to answer them or some of them (r 6) Leave granted is, therefore, not an order to answer within the meaning of r 21 entailing a dismissal or striking out a defence (4)

- "Interrogatories"—For form of interrogatories, seo Schedule IV 123 of last Code and easo cited, (5) and r 4 post Interrogatories are only affidavits obtained in a particular way, and the party wishing to use them must put them in as his evidence (6) Seo as to their use r 22, post

In England formerly the decrease established that an infant, by reason of incapacity, could not be interrogated (2) nor could be be made to give discovery of documents (3) nor could such orders be made against a next friend (4) or guarden ad litem (5) as such mether having the status of a party as that term is understood in the rules define with the subject. Now, however, reason where the order applicable to infant plantific and defendants, and to the next friends and guardians of litem of persons under disability (6).

The Bombay High Court (7) has however, in the case cited, anniving the present English rule, held that an affidavit of documents may be required from a minor defendant, though the Judge stated that he did not decide that a next friend or cuardian of an infant could be directly ordered to make an affidavit of documents. It has however, been pointed out (8) that the order as made was invalid (the guardian od litem being willing to make in iffidicit) and that the the current was in reality to be made by the guirdish and the Calcutta High Court has in the case cited held that a minor cannot be comes hed to sive dis covery under sect 129 of the former Code, nor on the same principle (viz. his me marity) could be be interrogated under the section entresponding to this rule, nor could his next friend or guardian be considered an "opposite party" upon whom such interrogitories can be served within the meaning of that action It has however, been said that a guardian ad litem in as under circumstances be made a party for the purpose of obtaining discovery from him (9) But even in this case which was an excentional one, it was held that where the guardian had been made a party defendant for purposes of discovery, the discovery was not intended to include the right to administer interrogatories

"Insufficiently '-O 31,r 11 It does not apply to rent suits in Bengal (see r 1 atto) The same necessity for clear specific answers and ab ence of all orasion is required as in the case of pleading as to which see O VIII r 4 If the answer is evasive the usual practice is to require a further answer More over, matter of supererogation should not be introduced. It is, of course legitimate to explain or qualify an answer But when an answer is couched in a form which makes it embarrassing that is to say which prevents the person who asks it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matter as part of it it is insufficient (1) A party must answer to the best of his knowledge information and belief (2) He is bound therefore to state all the information he already possesses, though he is not bound to obtain it of any one except his agents and servants Of these he must inquire using his best efforts bond fide to get the information. He must also examine documents in his possession or power if necessary (3) The question in all cases is whether the answer is insufficient The Court has not to go into the question of its truthfulness. If the Court is clearly satisfied (from certain sources as to which see r 6 ante) that the oath of the party by which he claims his protection cannot be really available for the purpose for which he puts it forward a further answer may be ordered But the oath should not be disregarded on mere suspicion. A substantial answer is sufficient under the present practice the substance and not the form being that at which the Court looks If looking at all the answers together the Court thinks that every question material to the issue has been fairly and substantially

"Relating to any matter in question therein"—The following interpretations have been given of these words —Documents containing information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery either to advance his own case, or damage that of his adversary, or which may furly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences (1). They are not confined to such as would be admissible in evidence (2) Every document which will throw any light on the case (3).

Objection to production—1s to what documents are privileged from production, see notes to r 6, ante The affidavit should set out the grounds on which privilego is claimed

But a party is not confined to the affidavit in which the claim is first set up

He is entitled to put m and use a further affidavit in support of his claim of privilege (4)

Sealing up—According to the Equity practice followed in the High Courts, a party may scal up such portions of otherwise maternal documents as he swears are privileged. A party must, however, specify what parts of the documents referred to he claims to scal up, and the grounds upon which the claim is based (5). If he does not, though the Court has allowed an application to consider the sufficiency of the affidativit, (6) jet technically the right way of raising the question is hy taking out a summons for production and inspection (7). When the right of a party producing documents to scal certain portions of them is contested, the Court appoints an officer to whom the plaintiff states in confidence why he wants to inspect any portion of the documents scaled, and the officer, after looking at the documents, reports whether and in what way the part noted or desired to be noted is material to the case of the other party (8).

Objection to affidavit—When an affidavit is technically insufficient, that is, in its terms, and fails to comply with the requirements of the Code, a summons may be taken out to consider its sufficiency, (9) and the party will be ordered to amend his affidavit or file a further affidavit, (10) as where the description of documents is imperfect (11) or improperly verified, (12) or where the affidavit does not specify what the plaintiff claims to scal up, and is not in the prescribed form (13). The only occasion where a party can be compelled to file a further affidavit of documents, is when the original afhdavit is insufficient, that is, in its terms, and fails to comply with the requirements of the Code If it is not alleged that the affidavit is defective in that respect, but that the affidavit contains statements which are untrue in fact, the party so alleging should specify the documents which he requires to see, and which have been omitted from the affidavit, and apply for an order of inspection under r 18, post (1) He must (as appears from that rule), in addition to the matters mentioned, show that the documents of which he claims inspection are relevant to the matters in question in the suit (2) If he is then met by an affidavit of the other party denying posses sion, that is a risk which the party seeking inspection must take For just as for the purposes of discovery an affidavit of documents denying possession is conclusive, so for the purposes of production and inspection an affidavit denying possession of such documents would be equally conclusive (3) The Court, however, in this decision distinguishing cases on the question of privilege which stand on a different footing, was not prepared to assent to the broad proposition that, as the oath of the party is conclusive on the question of possession, so also in an application under r 18, the affidavit of the opposite party is conclusive ou the issue of relevancy (4) An effective remedy may, however, be obtained at the hearing where possession is deuted. For if on cross examination or other wise it appears that the party has failed to disclose or refused inspection of relevant documents in his possession the Court will then direct immediate inspection to be given, adjourning the hearing at the cost of the person who has so evaded giving discovery (5) If the Court is clearly satisfied on a perusal of the affidavit, the documents therein referred to, and the pleadings, that the affidavit cannot be accepted the Court may, according to the English practice, order a further affidavit of documents But these are the only sources to which the Court may look for this purpose (6) It is not clear upon the Indian cases what course should be taken in such a case The case cited below (7) seems to suggest that a further affidavit will only be ordered where the affidavit is techni cally insufficient in its strictest sense, and where a defendant in his written statement referred to documents not set out in his affidavit, the Court discharged a summons to consider its sufficiency, holding that as the omitted documents were sufficiently described in the written statement, an application could be forthwith made for inspection if inspection were needed (8)

Conclusiveness of affidavit —Where, however, a proper affidavit has been filed, either originally or as the result of an order for a further affidavit, the oath of the party swearing the affidavit is conclusive upon the questions of possession, (1) privilege, (2) and, according to English practice, relevancy (3). The Court cannot regard the opponent's oath, the general rule in all questions of discovery being that where you have the oath of the party claiming discovery challenging the oath of the party giving discovery, the oath of the latter is for this purpose conclusive. The party seeking discovery must rest upon the affidavit, and he cannot even examine upon it, nor adduce evidence to contradict it, nor can he do this in another form by administering general interrogatories

14. It shall be lawful for the Court, at any time during is production of does the pendency of any suit, to order the proments duction by any party thereto, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in such suit, as the Court shall think right, and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just

"It shall be lawful"—This rule is taken from O 31, r 14 Scc, as to the discretion, note "Order the production" The rule enables any party who has obtained privitely, by interrogatories or by affidavit of documents knowledge of a document in the hands of his adversary, to compel production But no order for production can be made against a party unless he has directly in unitted it to be in his possession or power. See notes to r 13, and

"At any time"—Therefore even as late as in appeal. As regards the earliest point at which the order may be made, the Court will act upon the content principles governing the time or stage for discovery. Vide onle, notes to r 1. An order under this rule may be made even before the issues have been framed (4)

"Order the production "—Under the Evidence Act in regard to cert intidocuments where they are absolutely privileged the Court has no power whith ever to order production. But under this rule the Court does possess the discretion, and this discretion is to be exercised according to the practice of the Court (5). In the case cited the Court held that though a document might not be such as passed directly between the legal adviser and the client yet if it was of such a nature as to make it quite clear that it was obtained confidentially

White,(3) at which time it was held that there was no dis cretionary power under this rule But in England the Court has since been given a discretion by the amendment of O 31, r 18 (2) And this is so here also under the second clause of r 18, post A party is entitled to production or inspection only when the books or papers are material and necessary to establish his cause of action The exercise of the power under this rule cannot be delegated to a commissioner (4) Upon an application for inspection of documents, which is objected to on the ground of immateriality, the Court will, if necessary, order them to be produced for its own inspection in order to judge of their materiality (5) The power of refusing inspection should be excreised with great caution, and the opposite party should be allowed to inspect and take copies of the documents when they relate to matters in issue, unless they are privileged in law, relate exclusively to the case of the party producing them, and contain nothing supporting or tending to support the other side (6)

other cause or excuse which the Court shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice, in which case the Court may allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit.

Notice to produce for inspection.—This is r 15 of the English O 31. There is a distinction between an application for general discovery of documents and an application for production of a specified document, that is, a document referred to in the pleadings or offidavits. The order for production may be made at ony early stage of the case, and, unlike the case of general discovery, a delendant is entitled to inspection although he has not filed his written statement (1) As to form of application, see No 124, Schedule IV of last Code and r 17. A Judge bas no power under this rule, or r 18, to direct inspection to be given of documents unless there he as an essential preliminary to the right of inspection either the specification of a document by the party seeking the inspection, or its disclosure by the other side in the pleadings or otherwise (2)

"Other party,"-A defendant may obtain discovery or inspection, as against a co-defendant, if the latter can be regarded as on opposite party (3) If the party on whom the notice is served should answer in the manner prescribed in the next rule, he should object to produce such documents as he considers he ought not to be compelled to produce, leaving his adversary to get an order for inspection under r 18, post

"And any party not complying "-The concluding words of this rule give an express power to the Judgo to allow the document to be used in evidence, a power which the Judge was originally held to hove by implication. As to documents referring to party's own title and "sufficient cause," see notes to rr 1, 6, ante (4)

Notice to admit documents -This rule, which has been considerably remodelled and is, with some slight alterations, the same as the English rule, is taken from O 32, r 2 For form of notice, see No 127 in Schedule I Part II of the former Code and the next rule A fuller form is given in the Annual Practice, Vol II Appendix B No 11 The rule is enacted for the facility of proof and saving of costs The rule has been held to extend to all documents which a party proposes to adduce in evidence, and whether in possession or other wise, and even though the opposite party has stated that he would not admit them (1) According to the Euglish practice, if a party does not save all just exceptions he is precluded from objecting to the admissibility in evidence of the documents admitted (2) Though that may sometimes be the case here, it would be necessary to consider in certain instances, eg a question of stamp and possibly in others whether the admission of the party could render that admissible which the law savs should not be admitted Further, an admission with the "saving" that a document is a copy merely dispenses with proof that it is a copy It does not, however, dispense with proof of circumstances per mitting secondary evidence being given Admissions of documents between co defendants to which the plaintiff is not a party cannot be entered as evidence against him (3) If the party having notice fails to prove the documents, the party refusing to admit will not be made liable for the costs of the unsuccessful attempt (4) This also appears from the words of the rule, which imply successful proof

ORDER XIII.

Production, Impounding and Return of Documents.

1. The parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first bearing of the sut, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents.

ments which the Court has ordered to be produced.

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced. provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs

Documents to be ready—If a plaintiff sussoricles on a document he not either produce it with his plaint or enter it on the list attached to it (O VII r 14). Any document which has not heen produced or entered cannot be received in evidence without leave of the Court (O VII r 18, see notes thereto). And by this rule the parties must bring with them and have in readiness at the first hearing, all the documentary evidence in their possession or power, (I) and on which they rely, and file it. But they need not file them unless they are good and assignable cause, abstained from bringing it before the Court at the first hearing, (4) or formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public decuments (5)

Provided that a document may be returned at any time carber than that prescribed by this rule if the person applying therefor delivers to the proper officer a certified copy to be substituted for the original and undertakes to produce the original of required to do so

Provided also that no document shall be returned which, by force of the decree, has become wholly void or useless.

(2) Every application made under this rule shall (nuless the Court otherwise directs) be supported by an affidavit showing how the record is material to the suit in which the application is made, and that the applicant earnot without increasinable delay or expense obtain a duly authenticated copy of the record or of such portion thereof as the applicant requires, or that the production of the original is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(3) Nothing contained in this rule shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the law of evidence would be madmissible in the suit

"The Court"—This rule, which corresponds with sect 138 of the Colo of 18.9, except that the latter section empowered the Court to send for records from public officer also, applies to Appellate Courts as well as those of original jurisdiction (1) The Judge should pass a distinct order on the application instead of recording the objectionable and meaningless order "Aults Shamd pesh" (2) But where a party petitioned the Court to send for certain documents and an order was made that the matter should be decided at the he ung, but no further application was made, it was held that the applicant was not entitled to appeal on the ground that the record had not been sent for (1)

- "May."—The Court has a discretion, and is not bound to send for the necord (2) though the discretion must be judicially exercised, and, as in other cases where the legislature uses the word "may." where a proper case for the evercise of the power arises, the Court should exercise it (3). The Court will see that the facts set out in the second paragraph are made out in the affidavit But if so the Court ought not to refuse the application merely because in its opinion the documents cannot be produced before the termination of the trial (4). The Court is not bound to send for the whole record, but only such papers as are mentioned in the application (6).
- "Application"—This must show that the record is material, (6) that copies cannot be obtained, or that if obtainable they are insufficient, the original being necessary, as where copies cannot be attested by subscribing witness (7) It was held that in all cases the party for whose benefit the documents have been used should be required to file copies in the record (6)
- "Other Court "—As already stated the Court cannot now, as under the Code of 1859, send for records from public offices (9) The record must be that of a suit or proceeding in another Court. The proper means of obtaining the other records is by summons directed to the proper officer. The Court to which the direction is issued has no discrition to refuse to send records which have been sent for by another Civil Court (10).

ORDER XIV

Settlement of Issues and Determination of Suit on Issues of Law or on Issues agreed upon

1 (1) Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or is a law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other

(2) Material propositions are those propositions of law or show a right to sue

his defence

(3) Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue

(1) Issues are of two kinds (a) issues of fact (b) issues

(1) Issues are of two kinds (a) issues of fact (b) issues of law
(5) At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the prites as may appear necessary, ascer tain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the ease appears to depend

(6) Nothing in this rule requires the Court to frame and record issues where the defendant at the first hearing of the suit

makes no defence

- 2 Where issues both of law and of fact arise in the same [states of law and of suit, and the Court is of opinion that the case fact or any part thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined
- 3 The Court may frame the issues from all or any of the is is in the state of the issues may be framed

 (a) allegations made on eath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties,

- (b) allegations made in the pleadings of in answers to interiogatories delivered in the stut,
 - (c) the contents of doenments produced by either party.
- 4. Where the Court is of opinion that the issues caunot be court may examine witnesses or documents before framing issues.

 In the suit, it may adjoin the framing of the issues to a future day, and may (subject to any law for the time being in force) compel the attendance of any person or the production of any document by the person in whose possession or power it is by simmons on other process
- Power to amend, and strake out, issues.

 The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in contioversy between the parties shall be so made or framed
 - (?) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

Object and effect of issues—The object of pleading is that each side order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues (1). The pleadings, therefore, are the first stage at which the differences between the parties are made to appear. They may contain an express admission. Pleadings, however, in this country lave hitherto not been construed with the same strictness as in England, where legal assistance of a highly expert character is always available. The Counts therefore, have refused to apply to Indian pleadings the strict rule that avarients not traversed must be taken to be idmitted (2). Orders VI and VIII now require a stricter practice which is itself justified by the increased professional efficiency. Where, however issues have been framed, it was held prior to this Code that avariments upon which no issue have been framed must be taken to be admitted (3). For if praties intend to ruse a question they should request the Court to frame an issue upon it Where parties in a lower Court allow a sunt to be conducted as if a certain fact was admitted, they cannot afterwards in appeal question it, and recede from the tacit admission (1) It has been said that the duty of raising issues rests under the Code on the Court, and that an admission cannot be inferred from the omission to ask the Court to raise an issue (2) The Court no doubt frames the attention to it, with a view to recream if it is contested or admitted, and if contested to raise an issue on it. If this is done and no issue is raised, then the averiment must be taken to be admitted, otherwise these provisions are useless. As regards other cases, something may depend on the circumstraces, but if the detum cited was intended to be of general application, it is, with respect, submitted to be insourced.

"One party."—That is ordinarily the plaintiff on one side and the defendant on the other. At issue between co-defendants is generally not allowable (3) In some cases, however, thus may be done, as where the recording and determination of such issue is necessary to giving the appropriate rehef to the plaintiff (1). No issue can be decided between co-defendants if the suit is dismissed (5).

"Shall" Omission to settle issues—The Court is directed to do so, and to omit to settle in order that the parties may before the trial know to what points they would have to address themselves is a great irregularity (6). At the same time, if it appears that the necessary points have been raised and discussed, the omission to settle issues is not fatal to the trial of the suit (7). The Code contemplates the settlement of issues whether there is a written statement or not, though it is not obligatory on the Court to frame issues if the defendant makes no defence (8). And where hoth parties invoked the decision of the Court upon a question raised by the pleadings and the question was argued, it was held that the judgment upon it was not ultra vires because an issue was not framed embracing the whole question (1) Where, however, a settlement of issues is considered necessary the case may be remanded on appeal for a new trial after settling and recording the points in dispute, (2) as also where the issue does not sufficiently direct the attention of the parties to the main question to be decided (3)

On what fixed.—In the first place issues may be framed on the plaint and written statement which are the pleadings in the suit (4) When the issues come to be stated wider questions may be propounded (5) The Court is not hound to try the suit in the manner in which the plaint is framed, for its object is merely to bring the matter in dispute between the parties before the Court but on the settlement of issues the Judge is to ascertain the question (6) In fact the issues fixed, and not the pleadings, ought to guide the parties as to pro duction of evidence (7) The real points, however, are often missed or obscured by the infelicitous mode of drawing pleadings which sometimes prevails in the Mofussil And it is therefore the duty of the judge to ascertain from enquiry of the parties or their pleaders the real points in dispute between them A Court is not hound down to the language of the pleadings (8) Issues, it has heen said, may he settled even where a plaint discloses no cause of action (9) though a Court has also in such case a discretion to reject it A defendant is not precluded from setting up a defence which does not appear in his written statement (10) But the issues rused should not be inconsistent with the plead ings Thus, where the plaintiff sued alleging a deed purporting to be executed hy himself to be a forgery, the Court should not admit the inconsistent issue whother it was executed under undue influence (11) The Court may also look to interrogatories and contents of documents produced action and are demed by the defendant, or as are essential to support a plea and are denied by the plaintiff, and mere pieces of evidence which are to be adduced to enable the Court to infer the truth of a material statement ought not to be made the subject of separate issues (1) Where a fact is expressly or impliedly admitted no issue, of course, arises, nor is proof of that fact necessary But where the proof given falls short of legal requirements, the mere default of a party to contest a point which also falls short of an admission will not avail to cure the actual want of evidence (2) If a plaint and its proof lead to particular issues the Court should raise them and give relief, provided they do not come by surprise on the defendant and are within the scope of and not inconsistent with the pleadings (3) But a plaintiff will not be allowed to set up one case, and having proved another, ask issues to be raised to suit the proof (4) See, however, notes on "Amendment of Issues," post If a case not alleged by the plaintiff is disclosed on the evidence the Court can allow it to be set up, provided a specific issue is raised for it, and the defendant is given an opportunity of meeting it (5)

by them (1) Where a defendant pleaded limitation but placed that issue upon the simple fact that he himself had possession for twelve years and upwards which issue was found against him held it was too late for the defendant in appeal to object that that finding did not dispose of the issue of limitation (2)

Order of disposal—A Court is not under any obligation as to the order in which it is to try the issues which are raised before it, but may dispose of them in the way which it considers most likely to conduce to the ascertamment of the truth (3) But issues should be tried separately, and not mixed up together (4) Issues of law may, under the circumstances stated in r. 2, be tried first (5)

"Nothing in this rule"—It was held under the Code of 1859, that if both parties appear, issues should be recorded, but if the defendant does not appear it is not possible to ascertain the points at which the parties are at variance In such a case i Court does not frame issues, but hears the cases exparte (6) The rule explessly oxcludes such a case

Amendment of issues -It will be observed that the word "may" occurs in the early part, and the word "shall" in the concluding portion of the first paragraph of r 5 The power of amending issues is almost the same as that given by the Common Law Procedure Act, and it has been held that a Judge is not bound to make such amendments, except for the purpose of more effectually putting in issue, and trying, the real question in controversy as disclosed by the pleadings on either side In some cases the Courts, in their discretion, have gone boyond this, and, where no injustice would be done to either party, have allowed issues to be raised on matters which do not strictly come within the scope of the pleadings The power to allow such amendments is given by the first part of the rule which give a discretion, and not under the obligatory words of the latter part of the rule (7) The power which is given to the Court by r 5 (corresponding with sect 141 of the Code of 1859) to modify the issues in the course of the trial is meant to enable it to bring out the questions really arising out of the counter averments of the parties It is not intended that the Judgo should take the case altogether out of the hands of the hitgants and make for the plaintiff or defendant a case which he had no intention of making for himself (8) A Court's power of raising additional issues is co extensive with its power of amending plants, and is subject to the same restrictions. A Court therefore was held not authorized by the corresponding section to this rule to frume new issues which had the effect of altering the nature of the suit (1). A permission to a defendant in file a supplemental answer does not entitle him to make a new case or raise a freel issue in contradiction of his former defence (2). Every matter fairly within the seopa of the plaint, if important for the decision of the substantive difference between the parties, should be framed into an issue, and the duty of framing them is thrown in the Court in order to render substantial justice, and to prevent a party suing from heing remitted to a new suit, when, by a amtable order as to terms upon which amendment shall be made, the Court, by framing additional issues, can determine in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties (3)

The rule says "et any time" heforn decree But when there has heen a hearing and settlement of issues, the Court will, ordinarily, not exercise its discretionary power to raise a new issue except on clear proof of inadvertence, or mistake, or the discovery of new matters affecting the merits not within the knowledge of the parties at the date if the forumer settlement of issues (4) If the Court intends to frame an additional issue, it should do so and then ma a day for the further hearing upon such issue. It should not merely record its intention to do so and leave the actual framing for the time of giving judgment (5) plant has been amended in first appeal and the suit remanded for the determination of a fresh issue arising upon such amendment (6). The form, however, of a suit may not allow of particular lights heing declared in it (7). An amendment may be set saide in appeal (8).

Although, under certain circumstances, a Judge at a trial may allow amendments or raise sease other than those settled yet when a Judge at the retitement of issues, has refused to raise a certain issue, that question ought not to he reopened at the trial, and the Judge at the trial ought not to modify the issues so as to re open any question which the Judge settling the issues has decided (9) When a Judge transfers a case to his own file he is nt liberty to amend the issues first laid down, and to frame additional issues and to go into the whole ease, except upon any question upon which there has been a judicial finding (10). The first part of cl (1) of r. 5 leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit, but the latter part makes it imperative to fame such additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy (1)

Appellate Courts—In appeal the ease should be dealt with not on the mere wording of the plaint, but on the issues settled for trial, and the mainer in which the ease was tried by the first Court (2). A ground of defence, which was not taken in the written statement nor made the subject of issue, was not allowed to be argued (3). Where issues have not been settled, but the judgment states the points for consideration which appear to have been raised by the parties, then these points have been taken as the issues (4). Where a new issue is raised in the Appellate Court, it should be done in such a way as to give the parties the fullest opportunity of producing evidence upon it (5). See O. XLI, it 25, 26.

Questions of fact or law may by agreement be stated in form of issues.

Questions of fact or law to be decided between them, they may state the same in the form of an issue, and enter into an agreement in writing that, upon the finding and shall, upon the finding or decision on such issue, pronounce judgment according to the terms of the agreement, and, upon the judgment so pronounced, a decree shall follow.

Agreement to state issue -These rules deal with the stating by consent of a special issue in a suit, whilst O XXXVI deals with proceedings without suit on the agreement of the parties (1) These rules provide for what may be called the adjustment or compromise of a suit, not absolutely as does O XXIII r 3, but contingently on the opinion of the Court on certain issues of fact or law submitted to it (2) Upon the finding of that issue the adjustment or compromise becomes absolute, and when it does, the duty of the Court is to pronounce judgment (3) The word "may ' in the corresponding section to 1 7 meant "shall," and the Court was bound to give judgment according to the agreement. even though specific performance of it might ordinarily be refused (4) In a case decided under the Code of 1859 the defendants filed a regular appeal. The respondent objected that no appeal would be as both parties had entered into an agreement in writing to abide by the determination of a single issue set forth in the agreement, and which had been decided against the appellant. It was held that the Lower Court's decision on an issue so determined by agreement could not be contested in the appeal which was dismissed (5) These rules deal with a question being referred to the finding of the Court But where the question of fact was referred to the finding of a Commissioner at was held that the principles had down in these rules were applicable and that the defendants were estopped

1. Where at the first hearing of a sint it appears that is. the parties are not at issue on any question Parties not at issue. of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce indement.

Parties not at issue -This rule corresponds with sect 111 of the Code of 1859, and 152 of the last Code If the defendants voluntarily appear in Court and confess judgment, no summons is necessary for their appearance, and the Court may at cace give judgment for the plaintiffs (1) When the plaintiff sues the right person, but serves the summons on another person of a sumilar name, who appears and denies liability the suit should be dismissed with costs (2)

Where there are more defendants than one and any one is One of several defend. of the defendants is not at issue with the plaintiff on any question of law or of fact, ants not at issue, the Court may at once pronounce judgment for or against such defendant and the suit shall proceed only against the other defendants

(2) Where the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the sint, and shall fix a day for the production of such further cyclence, or for such further argument as the case requires.

Determination of issue -A Judge cannot dispose of a suit at the first hearing if a party appears and objects to the adoption of that procedure (1) When a summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, a Judge should not proceed and try the cause unless under the circumstances laid down in this rule, for otherwise he might preclude a party from adducing evidence in support of his case, (2) but if the evidence adduced is decisive of the matter in dispute, then the Judge may dispose of the cause unless either of the parties distinctly objects and asks for time to produce evidence in support of his case (3)

In the under mentioned case (4) the Privy Council observed entering upon the particular questions raised by this appeal, it may be right to observe, that the Courts in India, in disposing of the case, were bound to proceed as the High Court appears to have preceded, upon the facts alleged by the plaint, and upon the assumption of the truth of those facts When a plaintiff, on certain alloged facts, asks relief, and is unable to obtain a trial of the facts, and a hearing on the facts that he may establish, by reason of the con clusiens of law which the Judgo forms on the case in its then condition, justice requires that the Court should proceed upon the plaintiff's allegations The caso must be determined as if it had arisen on a demurrer to a pleading or to evidence where such procedure exists Courts cannot be justified in refusing to allow cases to go to proof upon any other assumption than that the facts alleged are capable of proof, and are preved This assumption of the truth of the facts alleged must, however, be limited to the consideration of the legal effect of the facts alleged upon the bars raised against the trial of those facts

Where the summons has been assued for the final disposal of the suit and either party fuls Fallure without sufficient cause to produce the evidence. evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may, if it thinks fit, after framing and recoiding issues, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary for its decision upon such issues

Failure to produce evidence -It was held under sect 145 of the Code of 1859, which corresponds to this rule, that although a case may have been set down for final disposal, yet if it be a case in which further evidence is required the Judge is bound to adjourn the case, unless he is satisfied that the plaintiff has, without sufficient cause, failed to produce his evidence (5)

Where the party had himself originally undertaken to bring the witnesses it was held that his failure to do so was no sufficient reason for depriving the party of his right to have subpoems issued, although it might be a reason for not waiting for them if the plaintiff's case had been in other respects finished before they could be examined (1) In fact the question whether a Court should issue a summons or should adjourn, are two entirely distinct matters (2) The Court has, except in cases of manifest abuse of procedure, no discretion to refuse an application for summons. Even after issues have been fixed or the hearing has commenced, the Court must grant summonses if applied for, though it may inform the party applying that it does not intend to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witness. For it might happen that the hearing was not concluded before the witness appeared and that it would be right to hear the witness so summoned , (3) and a Court cannot tell beforehand what means a party may have for facilitating the attendance of his witnesses (1) If the Court wrongly refuses summons the High Court may interfere in revision (5) If summons has been granted and the witness does not appear, the Court will proceed unless an application is made The Court ns shown

- (3) Where the Court is subordinate to a High Court, regard shall be had, in fixing the scale of such expenses, to any rules made in that behalf

Expenses of witnesses - See sect 151 of Act VIII of 1859 Before a witness is summoned, a sufficient sum for his expenses in going to and from the Court and for one day's attendance must be deposited in Court (1) It was in an early case (2) held that the sum fixed must have reference to the travelling expenses or other charges of a similar nature, and where a witness who had incurred ne expense in travelling asked for compensation for loss of time the application was refused. A party need not pay any more into Court until it has fixed what is reasonable (3) Once swern, a witness must give his ovidence even though his expenses have not been paid. But he does not cease on that account to be under the protection of the Court, and he is entitled to be paid his expenses though he has not applied for them before giving his evidence (4) The provisions relating to the payment of witnesses no doubt contemplate that the expenses should be paid by the party who asks the Court to summen the witness before he gives his cyldence but they do not declare that unless this is done the Court has no power to require their payment. They are intended for the benefit of the person summoned and there is nothing in them to protect the party who asks the Court to issue a summons from his hability to pay the expenses of the witness if the Court per incurram or in order to save delay issues the summons without seeing that the party applying for it discharges the duty imposed on him by law If he partially fails in such duty, and deposits some part but not the whole of the expenses the Court may require him to pay a further sum, and may levy the amount summarily from him There is no reason why the party should be in a hetter position when he fails to deposit any part of the expenses or if the witness has given his evidence than if he has not done so (5) A Court while bound to fix a reasonable amount to defray the expenses of a witness may allow only travelling expenses and charges of a similar nature not including compensation for loss of time. It may be a question whether this is in all cases sufficient. The case of expert witnesses is, however recognized as exceptional and the section has been amended to allow of a fee to such a witness

Parties -The preceding rules deal with witnesses who are not parties A party may appear by pleader or in person. In the former case if the pleader refuses or is unable to auswer any material question the Court may direct the absent party to attend under O X r 4 and on his failure to do so may pronounce judgment against him If a party whether appearing hy pleader or in person who is present in Court refuses without lawful excuse to carry out an order under r 20 the penalty is that stated therein Under sect 170 of the Code of 1839 a party who being summoned to give evidence or to produce a document failed without lawful excuse to comply with the order was also hable to have judgment passed against him. But this section has not been re enacted, and hy sect 178 of the last Code and r 21 of this Code a party is to be dealt with in such a case on the same footing as any person summoned as a witness. The liability therefore to judgment in case of default is limited to the specific instances mentioned in O X rr 4 and 20 supra Contempt of Court may be punished by fine and imprisonment (1) This rule gives a further power which is one to be used with forbearance and is to be enforced generally in cases of contumacious refusal (2) What is or is not lawful excuse must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The decision in one case can scarcely be a guide in another unless the facts are precisely the same (3) R 20 applies to Probate cases but it will not justify the Judge in dispensing with proof of the execution of a will (4) It has

Provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded

"Grant time"—That is at the instance of the parties—It has been held that the sections in the last Code which correspond with this and the next rule did not apply to an adjournment which is not made at the instance of the parties but which is necessitated by the rules of Court which regulates the disposition of its own business (1)

"Sufficient cause"—This must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case and precedents (2) are not generally of use. The Court how ever should act reasonably and with indulgence towards hitigants where there is no ground for imputing a deliberate intention to delay. A party has a legal right to ask the assistance of the Court in obtaining summons to or a commission for the examination of a writness. But if he has delayed so long that he fails to get the process executed in sufficient time, he of course must take the consequences of his delay. The Court will not adjourn the case to remedy his neglect (3).

Review. Appeal—Once an order for adjournment has been mide it should not be resemded on review unless on good and sufficient cause shown and in the presence of the other party (2) Orders under this rule are not open to appeal (3) Their propriety can be questioned in an appeal from the final decree. An Appellate Court, however, is not generally inclined to interfere with inferior Courts, in the exercise of the discretion allowed to them to grant or refuse an adjournment (4). An order made by a Judge of the High Court at settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of a suit is not an order under this rule and is appealable under the Letters Patent (5).

2 Where, on any day to which the heating of the sub roccedure if parties is adjourned, the parties or any of them fall to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX or make such other order as it thinks fit

Applicability -This rule is an application to adjourned hearings of the procedure prescribed for the first hearing The distinction between this rule and the next is that where there is a default in the appearance of the parties and their pleaders on the date fixed for the adjourned trial of the suit, a decree may be passed under this rule and subsequently the ease may be revived under O IX r 9, but where time has been given to one of the parties to do an act and he fails, the order is passed under the next rule, and the matter cannot be revived but is only subject to review of judgment or to appeal (6) This rule, which speaks of the disposal of the suit includes cases in which there may not be any materials before the Court to enable it to pronounce a decision on the The next rule contemplates a case in which the Court has materials before it to enable it to proceed to a decision of the suit The contingency, however contemplated in this rule may happen in a ease which falls within the letter of the next rule Iu such a case, if there are no materials on the record, the appropriate procedure to follow would be that laid down in this rule, whereas if there are materials the Court should proceed under the next rule (7) The effect of this rule is to make O IX r 8 applies ble to adjourned hearings of cas s (8) See notes to that rule

"Anv day."—That is the specific day to which the suit is adjourned The

the hearing of the case, if the hearing had not taken place on the day originally fixed (2)

"Dispose,"—This term in this rule refers not only to the disposal of the suncer parte, but also to the final disposal of it, and includes therefore not only the procedure up to the passing of the decree, but also the procedure for setting aside that decree when made. A Court, therefore, which has rightly dismissed a suit on an adjourned hearing by virtue of the provisions of this rule and O. IX r. 8, may also restore tunder r. 9 of that Order (3).

"Other order"—The Court is not bound to proceed under the rules mentioned (4)

Appeal.—It was held that an order dismissing a suit at an adjourned hearing for non appearance of the plantiff and his pleader was an order under sect 157 of the last Code, and its consequential sect 102 and not 158 and a refusal to consider an application under sect 103 of that Code was appealable (5) No appeal was held to he from an order under the section corresponding with this rule read with sect 108 of the last Code setting aside a decree passed exparte in default of appearance of the defendant on the day to which the hearing of the suit had been adjourned Under O XLIII an appeal is given in the case of orders under it? 9 and 13 (6)

"Any party"—The rule does not refer to adjournments by the Court at its own motion, (2) and appears to apply to a case where any one party and not both has had a case adjourned (3). Where after issues had been settled the hearing was adjourned to a fixed date for final disposal, and on that date plaintiff did not appear ou which the suit was dismissed, it was held that the former section did not apply, as it had been adjourned in the ordinary way and not in favour of either party for the purposes mentioned (4)

"To whom time"—\ date must be fixed within which the act must be done The stringent provisions of the full cannot be put in force unless the part has had distinct notice in respect of time of what is required of him and default in the matter of time is of the essence of the particular kind of default contemplated (5)

"Fails"—It must be shown that a specific order has been disobered either as regards time (wide ante) or otherwise. So as costs are ordinarily recover able in execution there is no default to obey all order as to costs in the absence of a specific direction making the payment of costs a condition precedent to the hearing of the evidence of the party in default (6). Where the Court refused to grant plaintiff's application to be allowed to examine a defendant as a wriness on her behalf and on the adjourned date of hearing the plaintiff failed to produce any other witness it was held that as plaintiff a application should not have been refused she had not committed default (7)

"Any other act'—The rule while mentioning the production of evidence and the attendance of witnesses (8) says any other act, provided that that at is necessary to the further progress of the sunt, such as the payment of costs for the issue of a commission (9) but not where the plaintiff fulls to make up a deficiency in respect of stamp such matter having been provided for hy sect 54 now O VII r 11 ante (10)

Statement and production of evidence -The first paragraph of r 2 is the first paragraph of seet 179 of the last Code. The third rule is taken from sect 10 The plaintiff and such of the defendants as support the plaintiff a case, wholly or in part, must address the Court and call their evidence first, and the other party (namely the persons opposed to the plaintiff's case and that of the defendants supporting it) must address the Court and call their evidence (1)

The evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open Coint in the presence Witnesses to be examined in open Court and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge.

Witnesses -The parties must elect their witnesses, summon them, and if they do not attend, move the Court to secure their attendance, and when a Commission has been issued the Court must be moved to wait for the return It is not the business of the Court to determine what witnesses shall be examined They should then call upon the Court to examine such of them as may be offered for examination (2) It is the duty of the Court to examine every witness tendered. though he has not been summoned or his name has not been enlisted in the list , (3) unless it is clear that the intention of the party producing the witness is to delay or obstruct justice (4) He should not select a certain number only for examina tion . (5) nor send some away because he had examined as many on one side as on the other, (6) or because he thinks their evidence will probably not be of much value, (7) or because they would only prove the same facts as already deposed to (8) It is in the discretion of the Court of first instance to allow a party to call further evidence after he has closed his case (9). Predecessor's Judgment—This rule adopts the decision in Parbutty v Higgiu,(1) which distinguished Mutty Lull Sen v. Desh Kar Roy,(2) where the written opinions were regarded as mere minutes, and not as judgments, on the ground that in order to there being a final judgment of the Court, there must have been a final meeting and consideration by all the Judges who heard the case as to what their judgment was to be (3) An objection having been raised to the legality of a judgment on the ground that the Judge wrote it after he had been transferred, it was held that this section afforded au answer.(4) It is not necessary that the judgment should have been written by the Judge before he has taken leave or left the post which he was occupying when he heard the case (3). This rulo is not mandatory (6)

3. The judgment shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save as provided by section 152 or on review.

"Altered."—Act VIII of 1859, sect 185 Rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts (O XLIX r 3) in their original jurisdictions. Where a party dies after hearing, but before judgment, which is reserved, entry may be made name pro tune (7). The judgment, which is reserved, entry may be made name pro tune (7). The judgment, which must be written, may be altered either before pronouncement, or after pronouncement, but before signature, provided that in such latter case the alteration is itself pronounced. This rule prohibits the Judge, subject to the exceptions stated, from adding to (or altering (8)) his judgment after he has pronounced, dated, and signed it (9). Where a Court raises several issues, and records findings on some only of them, it is not open to it subsequently to add to its judgment further findings on the remaining issues, although they may lead to the same conclusions as previously arrived at (10). In the fligh Court, where judgments are oftendeln cred orally and takendown by the Assistant Registrar, the Judgment on tof Court before signature, and their returns the judgment to the record.

Courts (O XLIX r 3) This rule renders it imperative upon the Court to pronounce its opinion upon such issues as may be necessary for the disposal of the suit. It does not, however, disable the Court from determining the other issues also (1) In fact, it is convenient that this should be done where evidence has been allowed to be given on all the issues, since by omitting to do so a case may have to be remanded which night otherwise have been finally decided on uppeal (2). The findings, however, on issues other than those upon the determination of which the decree is based ought not to form part of the Court's decree, and will on application for that purpose be struck out (3).

Applicability of rule—Act VIII of 1859, seet 189 This rule does not apply to High Courts (4) in original jurisdiction. An opinion has been expressed that the section of the former Code, by virtue of the operation of sects 582 and 632 of that Code, was applicable to the High Courts on the appellate side, but that if that was not so the Court had an inherent jurisdiction to bring its deerees in accordance with its judgments (5). compromise is not such a judgment as is contemplated by this rule, there being no expression of judicial opinion on the merits of the case (1)

Contents of decree.—The decree must agree with the judgment, and under the next rule the Judge should be satisfied of such agreement before he agas it. The maternal findings in each ease should be embodied in the decree, and if they are not, it is incumbent on the parties to avoid their being bound by decisions against which they have no right of appeal, to apply to the Court which passed the decree to amend it in accordance with the judgment, (2) for evidence cannot be given in execution to clear up uncertainty in the decree (3). Decrees should be drawn up in such a way as to be certain and capable of execution (4) and as to be self contained and capable of execution without reference to any other document (5). But if on reference to the record the defect in the decree can be so far met as to render the decree capable of execution, it should be executed (6). For though Courts should be careful not to draw up imperfect decrees, it is also just that litigants should not be deprived of the fruits of their succe sowing to the carelessness of the Court or its officers in the preparation of the decree (7).

In order to see what an ambiguous decree really means, the Court may look both to the judgment, pleadings and the record, for the decree states only the relief or other determination of the suit, but not the grounds of determination, nor does it afford any information as to the matters which were in issue (8) and the Judge passing the decree being the most suitable person to construct, a Superior Court will not ordinarily feel itself justified in placing on it in different construction (9). In a recent case in the Calcutta High Court a decree of a lower Appellate Court was set aside on second appeal, not because it was crouceous but because its meaning was doubtful (10).

to him in the ordering part, even though his immers mentioned in it devolves (1) What is intended to be ordered should be expressly declared (2). For anything which the party executing the decree is to recover must be found in the decree which he is executing, and not elsewhere, and which decree must be executed as it strinds, such as costs, (3) interest, (4) mesic profits, (5) or interest on mesic profits (6). The title-deeds of an estate leaves, and other dominents of the like kind are accessory to the estate, and pass with it, whether the trinefer is made by conveyance, ceitherate of sile, or decree for possession (7).

A decree "according to the terms of the judgmant debtor's written state mant," incorporates the terms of it (8). A decree for "the plaintiff's claim with costs," was held to mean the claim is but in the plaint (9). The words "the plaintiff is to have judgment for his mosety with interest at the full legal rate and the costs of the proceedings in the Court below," have been held to give plaintiff a decree for the moiety claimed by him, i.e. the sum which he alleged to be due for principal plainterest, with interest from the date of sint up to realization (10). A decree declaring that the defendant has a right of occupancy on payment of a proper rent without defining the rent is defective.(11) and so is a decree for exclusive possession of land not in the sole possession of the judgmant-debtors, the shares of the different shareholders not having been defined, (12) as also a declaratory decree regarding the possession of an idol from time to time by contending parties which does not define the period of worship by each, and provide for the reconveyance of the idol (13). Where, however, the amount of mesne profits is directed by the decree to be ascertained in execution, the plaintiff is not limited to the amount claimed in the plaint (3). As to purchase by plaintiff during pendency of proceedings, see note (4). Where a plaintiff sued, while his lease was still running, to recover possession, and the loan expired after action brought, but before decree. held that the decree should have declared right to possession with mesne profits, but should not have declared actual possession to be given (6). The relief given must of course be one authorized by I'm. So in decreeing a claim on a simple money bond a Court has no authority to direct the realization of the money out of any named property, and thus make it a charge upon such property (6).

Where a decree of a Lower Court is confirmed on appeal, and that decree directs something to be done within a specified time, the time is to be counted from the date of the appellate decree (7) But the rule does not apply if the appeal is withdrawn, (8) and the fret that an appeal has been presented does not enlarge the time for payment of the sum decreed, or prevent the decree from being executed (9) The mention in a decree of a term when a particular right is to become enforceable is not a condition precedent, but indicates a

Where, however, the amount of mesne profits is directed by the decree to be ascertained in execution, the plaintiff such limited to the amount claimed in the plaint (3). The relief given must of course be one authorized by law. So in decreeing a claim on a simple money bond a Court has no authority to direct the realization of the money out of any named property, and thus make if a charge into guich property (6).

Where a decree of a Lower Court is confirmed on appeal, and that decree directs something to be done within a specified time, the time is to be counted from the date of the appellate decree (7). But the rule does not apply if the appeal is withdrawn, (8) and the fact that in appeal has been presented does not enlarge the time for payment of the sum decreed or present the decree from being executed (9). The mention in a decree of a term when a particular right is to become enforceable is not a condition precedent but indicates a term from which limitation runs (10)

If the decree is not accurately and properly drawn up, the party should apply to amend (ede post)

No costs, nor interest on costs, cur be recovered unless there to any Court to correct its formal records in such way of needed as will make them repre ent trals the decision which was intended to be judicially expressed when the judgment was delivered (1) This may be done where there is clerical or arithmetical error, (2) or a variance with the judgment (3). The power is, however, limited to this, and should not be exercised except in accordance with the terms of r 3 or sect 152 arte (1) When a decree is in perfect accordance with the judgment, it cannot, subject to the provisions of sect 152, ante be altered, however erroneous the latter may be (5) The Code gives no power to alter or vary the decree. A review of judgment or an appeal can alone do this (6) The High Court has no power to after its own decrees except under the provisions of this rule or seet 111, ante (7) It has, however been recently held that a party is not limited to the remedy given by these provisions, and that a suit will be to rectify a mustake in a decree, (8) but in another case it has been stated that this can only be in special circumstances, and that as a general rule such a suit is not maintainable (9) An application to amend may be refused if made a long time after the date of the decree, and the latter should not be amended after execution is barred (10) A decree however has been amended subsequently to a Court sale (11)

Apparently according to one view under the list Code a decree might have been altered eith r by way of application under sect. 205 or under sect. 623 (12) If an application for review was made on several grounds and one of them referred to a charted mist the und if the other grounds were held to be untenable, the Court might reject the application and refer the applicant to his remedy under sect. 206. If it did not do so but on the application for a review amended the derical mistake the decree drawn up became the final decree and an appeal by it it was brought within the prescribed time from such final decree (13).

It is assumed, but the jurisdiction arises from the fact that the decree as drawn up and signed is not in accordance with the judgment. In the latter case, not only the correctness of the decree but the correctness of the judgment is questioned, and if the application under sect 623 (now 114) is allowed, are hearing of the suit or appeal becomes necessary. In the former case there is no rohearing (1). It has, however, also been held that there may be a review not only when there is something faulty in the judgment itself, but in cases of amend ment of decree which do not necessitate any alteration in the judgment, and that therefore an order passed on an application under the former section was substantially an order passed on review within the meaning of Art 179 of the Limitation Act (2)

There is a distinction between a case of amendment and one of novation or substitution. Where an instrument is amended so as to express the real intention which it was intended to express, but which it did not completely express, the transaction is not in substance varied but its maccurate description is only rectified Except, therefore, as specially provided for in sect 32 of the last Code (now O I rr 8-10, 11), an amended decree is operative from the date of the original decree (3) Assuming however, that the date of the decree is the date of the judgment, and therefore the date of the decree is not the date of amendment when the date of the judgment remains unaltered, the question arises whether an application for execution of a decree is affected by an applica tion under this rule. It has been held that such an application is not a step in aid of execution (4) and therefore as such does not save limitation. It has however also heen held that an order passed upon an application under the former section was substantially an order passed upon review of judgment within the meaning of the third clause of Art 179 of the Limitation Act, and that such an application saved limitation (5) A decree, morcover, is not operative until the amount fo

tion of the time in which any appeal may be preferred against such decree But where a decree is wrongly varied a party affected by such variation is entitled to calculate the time during which an appeal may be preferred as commencing from the date of the variation (1) The rest of the Court, however, apparently held that the time for appealing must be reckeded from the date of the original decree and not from the date of the amendment, but that it could strike out the improper amendment, no petition for revision being necessary (2)

What Court may amend -Where a decree requires amendment, the party aggreed should apply to the Court in which it was granted, and should not appeal on this ground, as in default of such application an appeal is un necessary (3) Where the decree was imperfect and could not he drawn up from the judgment, and the Judge who gave the judgment was no longer Judge of the district, the High Court ordered a fresh trial (4) The decree of an Appellate Court supersedes the decree of the first Court, even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree and does not reverse or modify it. Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended is the decree to be executed, viz that of the Appellate Court, and the only Court which has jurisdiction to amend the appellate deeree is the Court of Appeal If, therefore, the Appellate Court reverses modifies or affirms by dismissal of the appeal the decree of the first Court, the Lower Court has after the appellato decree, no power to amend (5) The Bombay High Court has held (6) that an exception exists to this rule in the case of appeals dismissed under sect 551 (now O XLI r 11), it being said that such a dismissal leaves the decree of the Lower Court untouched, neither confirmed nor varied nor reversed with the result that it remains the decree of the Lower Court, which can amend it Practi cally however, the effect of such disjuissal is to confirm the decree and it has also been held that the Lower Court cannot amend either in the case of appeals dismissed under sect 551 (now O XLI r 11) or tried after notice to the respon dent (7) Where a decree after being affirmed on appeal is amended by the original Court and no step is taken to set aside the amended decree the latter is hinding hetween the parties and its validity cannot be challenged in execution proceed ings on the ground that the original Court had no jurisdiction to make the amendment (1) The Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to amend a decree on the application of a non appealing defendant, when the decree has been confirmed on an appeal by the other defendants (2)

In executing a decree the Court of execution must take the decree as it finds it. It cannot amend the decree or alter it in any way, though it is bound, of course, to construe the decree. The decree in execution may be the decree of the High Court, and the proper Court to execute that decree may be the Court of the Munsif by whom the suit was first decided. The Munsif in respect of a decree made by an Appellate Court would be hound, as the Court executing the decree, to execute the decree whether he approved of it or not, even if the decree had been one made by bimself (3). And no evidence can be given in execution to amend uncertainty in the decree sought to be executed (4)

Notice—The Court can only amend the decree after such notice as may enable either party to prefer objections (5)

Erroneous order of amendment, how to be attacked —An order passed amending a decree is a separato adjudication and is not merely a part of the original decree (6) Such an order is not appealable (7) It may, however, be revised under sect 622 (now s 115) (8) or, it has been held, sect 15, of the Charter (9) As already observed, the decisions are not entirely agreed upon the point whether a wrong order should be attacked by way of appeal from the decree as amended or by way of revision of the order of amendment. It is plain that if a decree is properly amended and exception is taken to the decree and not to the amendment, then an appeal should be brought against the amended decree If no objection is taken to the decree as originally framed, but it is alleged that it has heen improperly amended, then, as what is complained of is the order of amendment, the reinedy should be according to the weight of authority by way of revision of the order of amendment, and not by way of appeal against the amended decree The third ease is where there is objection both to the original decree and to the amendment on the ground that it was not warranted, there heing no variance or clerical error. It is not clear on the authorities what course should be taken, but it would appear reasonable to allow all questions in such a case to be raised in an appeal from the amended decree. An order amending can be objected to in execution of the decree (1) and an appeal lies from an order pussed in execution (2)

High Court -Rules 1-8 of this Order do not apply Sec O XLIX r 3

Revision —It was held that proceedings under sect 206 of the last Code terminated in an order which could be dealt with on revision, as where the Court acted hey and its jurisdiction in making an addition to the decree not warranted by the judgment (3)

7. The decree shall bear date the day on which the pudgment was pronounced, and, when the Judge has satisfied himself that the decree has been drawn up in recordance with the judgment, he shall sign the decree

Decree - This rule does not apply to High Courts' in exercise of original purisdiction, O XLIX r 3 When a person has the judgment of the Court that he shall have a decree at may be said that he then obtains his decree decree when it is drawn up afterwards relates back to that time (4). But a formal decree must follow judgment, and is a necessary part of the ultimate procedure in all suits though madvertently it is not in so many terms required by the Code as a necessary proceeding after judgment. Without a decree a judicial record does not speak and wanting it no proceeding subsequent to the judgment can with any certainty be taken. It is in substance as well as form the mouthpiece of the suit in its immediate result (5) Whatever be the form of decret a separate formal decret should be drawn up. A copy of the judgment with the schedule of costs appended is insufficient (6). A decree must be in a civil suit (7) and differs from an order in that the former expresses the result of the judicial proceeding by way of suit or appeal and so far as suits and appeals are concerned, the latter are confined to such orders as are given in the course of proceedings and do not finally dispose of them. Date —The decree must bear the date on which judgment is delivered, and not the date on which it is drawn up,(1) and a decree operates from this date and not from that or which it may be subsequently amended (2) Limitation thus runs from the date the decree bears, that is, the date of the judgment, (3) though a suitor is entitled, in computing the period within which he can appeal, to deduct the time between the delivery of the judgment and the actual issuing of the decree (4)

"Satisfied himself."—It is the duty of the parties, or rather, of their pleaders, to see that a dec ce is drawn up in the proper form, and the signatures of the pleaders are generally obtained before the decree is finally signed (5) But though the duties of the pleaders remain as they were the Judge is not relieved by any action on their part from satisfying himself personally as to the correctness of his decree

"Sign."—After the decree has been duly signed it becomes and must be regurded as a decree of that date. Once a judgment is pronounced and the decree signed, it becomes a final decree, which may become the subject matter of appeal or leview. It cannot be altered except under the provisions of sect 152 or O XX r 3, or those relating to review (6)

- 8. Where a Judge has racated office after pronouncing procedure where Judge judgment but without signing the decree, has vacated office before a decree drawn up in accordance with such judgment may be signed by his successor or, of the Court has ceased to exist, by the Judge of any Court to which such Court was subordinate.
- 9. Where the subject-matter of the suit is immoveable property, the decree shall contain a description of such property sufficient to identify the same, and where such property can be identified by boundaries or by minibers in a accord of settlement or survey, the decree shall specify such boundaries or numbers.

Decree for immoveable property.—Act VIII of 1859, seet 190 Sect 207 of Inst Code I he words "can be "have been substituted for "to identified". The decree should show distinctly and accurately what property it deals with giving the boundaries and details of the property which the Court intends shall be covered by the decree, for if these are not given the decree may be impossible of execution (1). Where this is not done the decree holder's remedy hes in an immediate application to the Court which made the decree to have it rectified (2). Evidence cannot however, be given in the execution department to amend any uncertainty in the decree (3). Where a Judge decreed possession with reasilar without declaring specifically that plaintiffs were to recover the share which they have plaintiffs were held not entitled to be put in possession of any specific lands (4).

Suit for moveable property — let VIII of 1859, set 191. If there is a dispersion as to the movable property claimed the Court must of course determine it before passing its decree. It cannot let we the matter to be settled in evention (3). If it then passes a decree for deliver, it must state the amount to be paid as an alternative. This is reducinfly the value of the property in question (6). The Court may also pass a decree for damages (7). This section is in accordance with English law when took away from the defendant the option to return the goods or pay their value. Now priment can only be made if delivery cannot be had. If the goods are capable of delivery they must be delivered (8). An alternative praver for value of goods as compensation does not after the character of a suit (9).

(2) After the passing of any such decree the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree holder, order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or other

Decree for payment of money -Act VII of 1859, sect 194 Ordinally, if a party is cutified to relief he is also entitled to a decree awarding it to him at once. Therefore it was held that a Court in making a decree could not allow the defendant a period for payment of the amount decreed for the effect of such an order is that the decree holder is debarred from executing his decree until the expiration of such period (1) This rule however, authorizes the Court in a particular class of cases, viz decrees for money, to give the debtor time to dis charge the amount awarded by directing payment in instalments. But the authority given is strictly limited to these cases. Therefore the section is not applicable in a suit for the recovery of the amount of a bond debt by the sile of property hypothecated by such bond, such a suit not being merely one for money, (2) nor to a suit to enforce a hen or an annuity called nunlar (3) It was, however, held to apply to cases referred to m sect 58 of Act VII of 1869 and to give the Courts powers to make rent decrees payable by instalments (1) The former section it was held did not confer any anthority on the Courts to reheve contracting party from an express stipulation, in a bond payment by nest il ments, as to the consequence of default in punctual payment of the instalments (5) In the case cited the decree did not in compliance with the Code cout on line direction as to the agreement to pix by instalments (6) It has been held that a decree for payment of money includes a decree made under O XXXIV r 6 (7)

"The Court."—That is to say the Court which passed the decree (I) The order may be nade in or at the time of passing the decree, or subject to consent after the decree. If the case is one in which the Court itself could not have made a decree for payment by instalments, much less can the Court of execution vary that decree so as to give it an illegal effect in carrying it into execution (2). On the other hand, an order under this rule alters the decree, which can only be executed subject to such after it in of corrected minst be executed as passed (4).

"Sufficient reason "—The existence of this will depend upon the facts of the particular case. The Court will consider the circumstances under which the debt is so contracted, the conduct of the debtor his financial position, and so forth, and instalments should be directed where the defendant shows his bone fides by offering to pay anything like a fair proportion of his debt at once (5)

"Postponed" "Instalments"-Payment by instalments means that the defendant is to be directed to pay the amount decreed by partial payments to be made at specified periods. The former section did not authorize a Court to say that the defendant has the option of paying the amount decreed within a particular period after the deeree (6) Now the rule expressly provides for an order nostponing payment of the decretal amount. A temporary postpone ment is a smaller concession than a scheme of instalments, and in many cases such a discretion might be fifth exercised without writing as under the former Code for a judgment dehtor's arrest under sect 337A of that Code The powers given should be exercised with a due consideration for the interests of the creditor is well is those of the debtor Thus an order allowing nine years to pay a debt of Rs 110 was reversed and the period reduced by half (7) The rule gives the Court a discretion and it is not unusual to state in the order for payment by instillments that in default of payment of one instalment the whole debt shall become payable (8) The Court has a discretion to order or refuse interest but if it be the intention to give interest this should be expressly declared (9)

(2) Where an inquiry is directed under clause (b) or clause (c), a final decree in respect of the rent and mesne profits shall be passed in accordance with the result of such inquiry

the plaintiff has no specific interest until decree (1) A suit for mesne profits only is not within the section (2)

- "Recovery of possession of immoveable property."—The section does not apply to other suits for damages, in which suits the question of damages must ordinarily be determined at the trial (3) O XXVI r 9, however, allows a commission to issue to ascertain the amount both of any mesne profits or damages (1)
- "Mesne profits."—The Code of 1859 did not contain any definition of this term. The Code of 1877 added an Explanation, which was the same as that attached to sect 211 of the last Code down to the word "thereupon." That section repeated that explanation with an addition, viz "together with interest on such profits" (3). The definition of mesne profits has now been removed to soct. 2, clause (12)

Mesne profits are in the nature of damages, which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case (6) There is no analogy between interest awarded under sect 34 and mesne profits claimed and awarded under this rule (7)

The object of a suit for mesne profits is to compensate the owner of laind for being kept out of possession and deprived of the profits of the laind. The measure of the compensation is ordinarily the loss which he has suffered (8) Where a party is dispossessed of immoreable property, the cause of action as to usulat accrues to him ou the date on which he would, but for the fact of dispossession, have received such usulat (9). Parties in possession are liable for usulat to the legal owners whom they kep out of possession, even though there was no mala facts on their part, (10) and whether the wrongdoer derived any profit himself from the possession of the land or not, (11) though, as the principle is that the defendant should make up to the plaintiff what he has lost, a Court is right in excluding lands of such a nature as would under ordinary circumstances yield no profit (1)

All persons in wrongful possession, irrespective of how they got in, are liable, (2) such as a mortgagor from date of foreclosure, (3) an auction purchaser whose purchase is declared invalid, (4) a person in bona fide possession without knowledge of defect in his title , (5) an maradar together with his zemindar, (6) a body of intermediate holders combining to keep the true owner out of posses sion, (7) a sebait claiming the land as such (8) In the under mentioned case the defendants were not all in possession, yet as they had all combined to oppose the plaintiff's possession they were held all jointly liable for the uasilat (9) But where a person is in rightful possession until a sale or decree is set aside, though he is bound to account for mesne profits the calculation of which is to he based on a proper discharge of the stewardship of the property, he is not a trespasser, and as such hable to make good any loss sustained by the rightful owner being kept out of possession (10) In the case, moreover, of any wrong, the liability of a defendant is limited to damages for the wrong which he has himself done, and if the defendant was excluded from possession he cannot be said to have actually or even impliedly received the profits, nor could be with diligence have received them (11) So the Prixy Council have held that a person who had not himself received the mesne profits having come into possession of a taluq upon its heing released from management under the Oudh Tiluqdar's Relief Act, 1870, would not be chargeable with sums which as it was alleged, might have been received by way of mesne profits but had not been received in consequence of the manager's wilful default. Whatever case might have been made against the manager of the estate, the talugdar could not be charged with anything noro than was actually received by him (12) Mesne profits ought not to be estimated for any period during which the defendant who is to be made responsible for them was not active in keeping the pluntiff out of possession Therefore a defendant cannot be made to pay in respect of years when possession was in the hands of an officer of the Court (13) But where a defend int who had been in wrongful possession abandoned the fand without notice to the decreeholder, it was held that the land must be held to have continued in the judicial possession of the judgment-debtor, who was hable for mesne profits (1). In a suit for damages against several persons for jointly combining to keep plaintiff out of possession they are all equally hable to him, and none of them can restrict their hablity for mesne profits to that portion only of which by their joint agreement, they were in possession (2). In some cases, however, the hablity has been decided in proportion to the amount of profits that each bas derived from his own individual wrongful possession (3). The Court is competent to apportion the dumages in respect of the portions of land held by the defendants, alter where the defendants have jointly taken possession of a particular portion of such land (1). It was held that a plaintiff must bring a sint against joint wrongdoers, though what he does in execution of his decree is another matter (5). If the Court finds that a plaintiff has been dispossessed he is prival fines.

entitled to mesne profits in respect of the period of dispossession, and it is not necessary for him to prove the actual collections made during this period, for this is proof which be would possibly be unable to supply. It is sufficient to show what is the annual profit which in ordinary years can be collected, as, for instance, the profits for the years preceding or subsequent to the period of

dispossession (6)

Meane profits include profits actually received, or which might have been received. In other words, if the mesne profits actually received are those which ought to have been received, the planniff gets them. If however, they are less than what the planniff could have got, they must be assessed on the basis of his possible profits. The Court has to ascertain what the person in wrongful possession could have realized by ordinary diligence and not increly what he actually received (7). This really means what the planniff could have realized, for the person in wrongful possession may place himself in the position of, and for this purpose is taken to be in the position of the true holder, so as to charge, him with the profits which might have been made by the true owner (8).

It was said to be not clear whether a Court of Equity would ear-mark the profits of a trespasser invested in real property and follow them (1)

Wiful default is charged against persons in rightful possession, though accountable for their dealings with the property against those wrongfully (2) in possession. Indeed, the adoption of the principle of wilful default would be more favourable to the defendant than the principle of the Code, for there may be values recoverable by ordinary diffigure which yet it would not be wilful default not to recover (3)

Mesne profits, how calculated .- There is no abstract principle independeut of the particular facts which determines the assessment of mesne profits in every case The Court ought first to ascertain the facts and the nature of the plaintiff's possession of the land before ouster, and then determine the principle applicable in the particular case (4) When the facts are disclosed, the determining principle is this-What was the character of the possession of the plaintiff before he was ousted? and what has the owner lost? (5) Mesne profits are thus whatever profits the wrongdoer might with ordinary diligence have received from an occupation or position similar to that of the party wrongfully dispossessed, whether it he that of a cultivating ryot, landlord or zemindar (6) or talookdar (7) Where a person claiming mesne profits was himself the cultivator before dispossession, he is entitled to the profits which he would have made cultivating the laud if he had not been dispossessed The measure of damages is the value of the crops (8) And there is no distinction in respect of assessment of mesne profits between raight land held by a raight and the proprietor's cerait, or private land ordinarily cultivated by him, except as to the costs of cultivation (9) Where land is rangel, and the true owner is a rent receiver, assessment of mesne profits should be made on the hasis of fair and reasonable rent (10) Prima facie it is fair to infer that a person in possession of land may be ordinary diligence get rent for it according to the prevailing rates for such land, and that the true owner wrongfully dispossessed has been a lost by that amount (1)

If the true owner is placed in the same position as if he bad all along been in possession that is all that he is ordinarily entitled to, and it is not reasonable that he should receive any additional benefit, or that the person in wrongful possession should not only make compensation but he fined as well. On this principle it has been held that ordinarily the collection and other expenses incurred by the trespasser will be allowed and that it is only when the trespass is of a very aggravated character (2) that the Court in its discretion may refuse such expenses (3) The principle has been stated in another form, namely, that costs of collection and expenses should only he allowed when the trespasser entered the land in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, but that when the trespass is malicious and without bona fides, though the trespasser may still claim all necessary payments, such as Government revenue or ground rent, it is not imperative on the Court to allow him even such charges as would ordinarily but voluntarily be incurred by an owner in possession (4) But though a person, when sued may be entitled to a deduction he has no right to sue to recoup himself for his losses against the true owner and must bear the burthen of his own wrong (5)

The mode of calculation in cases of decrees for and against each of the parties, is to calculate and raterally divide them, and then to allow a set off to the extent of the profits actually received by each sharer, the deficit in each year being made good by the party who received in excess of his share (1)

Proof necessary.—In a sunt for meane profits it is, as in other cases in cumbent on the plaintiff to establish not only the existence of his right but also the extent of it. The first he does by proof that the defendant has wrongfully deprived hun of enjoyment, (2) and the second by proof of the duration of the wrongfull possession, and it is for that period only that damages are claimable (3). Where, however, it is shown that a particular jama is payable in respect of a property, it has upon the wrongdoer to show that the sum has not been realized (4). On him, as the party in possession and having the means of information, hes the onus of proving what is the actual amount of meane profits (5). It cannot be laid down however, as a general proposition that the burden of proof in this respect is always on the defendant. It depends on the circumstances, according to which presumptions may or may not arise in fivour of the plumtiff (6).

In calculating uasilat, evidence is usually taken of the rent paid. The party in possession is called on to produce his accounts, which are compared with the pottahs and dakhidas in the ryot's possession. Jummabunds payers filed by paticaris under the zenindar's supervision have been accepted as prima factor evidence of the profits of the estate (7). But settlement papers thirty yours old without inquity into the actual proceeds of the estate during the period of dispossession we useless is a basis to work on (8). When the amount of masne profits demanded is merely approximately given, the plaintiff is not bound by whith he has said in the plaint, but may be given more, though, of course such at tenent may be used as evidence against him (9). The ordinary risk, however bring that a plaintiff cannot recover more than he claims in the plaint

As regards mesne profits before suit as these have accrued due and the plaintiff has a cause of action in respect thereof a plaintiff sning for mesne profits is bound to put forward his whole claim. If he does not a subsequent suit for mesne profits prior to the first suit will not be (2)

Mesne profits are demandable from the date upon which they become annually due (3) But a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff s title has been held not hable for mesne profits from any date earlier than the institution of the suit where the plaintiff has been guilty of laches (4) and mesne profits were only allowed from the date of suit in other cases (5) Under Art 109 of the Limitation Act a defendant is hable for mesne profits received or which might have been with due diligence received during the three years before date of suit and not before. This period has no reference to the time when reuts fall due (6)

Accruing before suit -The assessment of mesne profits was held to be an essential part of the decree in the suit and not a proceeding in execution and therefore something which must be done by the Court trying the case which was authorized to male a decree in it It cannot be left to another Court which when the final decree is made may have to execute it (7). In a sint for recovery of possession and for mesne profits from the date of suit it was held that a Munsif could ascertain and award mesne profits even though they were in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court (8) The Court had either to determine the matter itself or direct an inquiry. But it must have done one or the other. Thus a decree swarding immediate mesne profits at the late admitted by the defendant and larger mesne profits contingently on a higher rate hemz proved at the time of execution was held to be irregular (9)

Decree.—A decree declaring the liability for mesne profits, but not determining the amount if worked out after the death of a defendant, did not, it was held, bind the heirs not parties (1)

Under the Code of 1859, the Court might reserve the inquiry "for the execution of the decree," a phrase which gave rise to difficulty (2) The Court under the last Code might "direct an inquiry." The proceedings were part of and a continuation of the suit, and no final decree existed to execute or appeal from until they were closed That part of the decree which denoted possession to be given was final, but the other part was interlocutory, and became final when the amount payable was fixed. An application to ascertain the amount of mosne profits was not an application for execution, but an application by which the decree holder moved the Court in a pending suit to make a final decree regarding mesne profits (3) And for this reason an application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits anarded by a decree was not affected by limit; tion (4) The Bombay High Court, however, held that a decree under sect 212 of the last Code was necessarily subject to the limitation had down in sect 211 of the same Code, and that meane profits for more than three years from the date of the decree should not be awarded, even though possession was not delivered during that period (5) The investigation into mesne profits, directed by the decree, was nothing more than a continuation of the inquiry which was set on foot at the trial into the merits of the plaintiff a case against the defendant, was not called upon to answer the plaintiff sease until the plaintiff had given some evidence in support of it (6). The direction as to the inquiry into the amount of mesus profits need not it was held necessarily be contained in the decree, (7) as to the form of which, see case ened below (8). Once the hability of a party was fixed in the Appellate Court the Lower Court had to confine its inquiry to the assessment of the amount of dimages (9).

Court may either determine the amount in the decree or may give a decree for possession, and then direct an inquiry into mesme profits, etc., and dispose thereof in the final decree. In a recent case where a plaintiff had brought a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of his title, which was granted, and for mesne profits, which were disallowed, it was held that sub-sect (2) of this rule implies that the decision with regard to possession is a preliminary decree within the meanine of sect 2(1).

Accruing after suit .- Sect 211 of the last Code, which referred to mesne profits accruing subsequent to institution of suit, was held to be an enabling one, and it would, it was said,(2) be neither unreasonable nor illegal to refuse subsequent profits up to date of decree and decree immediate possession . leaving the party in whose favour the decree was made to his remedy by a regular suit if immediate possession was not had The mere abstention therefore of the Court to award mesne profits after date of suit was held not to be a bar to any suit in respect thereof (3) A claim for mesne profits was held distinct from a claim for recovery of possession, and it was only under sect 41, rule A, of the last Code that such claims might be joined in one suit (4) In order to avoid multiplicity of suits the Court was empowered to assess damages not only so far as they accrued up to the commencement of the suit, but also those accruing after suit and during the continuance of the trespass But the section was not important or obligatory but discretionary (5) Where the decree was silent touching interest or mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit they could not be given in execution , but the plaintiff was still at liberty to assert his right to such mesne profits in a separale suit (6) Apart from the decisions cited the matter was made clear by pars 2 of sect 241 of the last Code (See, however, now post) But it had to be ascertamed on a proper construction whether the judgment and decree was silent on the point Wasilat by law is demandable up to possession, and therefore a decree for "possession with uasilat" was held to give uasilat up to the date of possession and not merely up to the date of suit (1)

A judgment dramssing an appeal is in reality an informal mode of confirming the decree appealed against. Where, therefore, mesne profits were warded from the institution of the suit until decree only, and the Appellite Court simply dismissed the appeal without providing for subsequent mesne profits it was held that these could not be recovered in execution (2). But where the original Court granted a decree for possession with "future mesne profits" and the Appellite Court approved that decree infloring mesne profits, it was held that mesne profits were granted by reference to the original decree (3). Where a decree was given for certain of the properties claimed and mesne profits, and the suit was dispussed as regards the other properties, and on appeal the Appellite Court revered the decree of dismissif, it was held that the appellite decree imported in ward of mesne profits on all moretty, the possession of which was decreed to the plantiffs (4) is to Court fees (5) and form of decree under sect 211 of the last (ode (6)

Under sect 244 clauses (a) and (b) of the last Code, the Come of evention determined questions relating to the execution. This is not so now under sect 47 of the present Code. The present rule enters that the Court of finil shall in continuation of the suit inquine into the question (c) notes to sect. 17). The panultimate section of sect. 241 of the last Code has not been removed, and probably any clum made and not expressly fainted in the decree will be deemed to have been refused within the meaning of Explanation V of sect. 11 to which mesne profits could be awarded short of that of obtaining possession. The Code of 1877 introduced the further limitation which now exists, and the rule thus restricts the time for which mesno profits can be allowed in a decree to three years from the date of the deerce. Consequently where no period is mentioned the decree cannot be construed as giving the plaintiffs profits for a period longer than what the law allows the Court to give (1) So proceedings for the purpose of a-certaining me-ne profits were held to be a continuance of the original suit, and the Court was bound by these provisions. Where, therefore, a decree directed that planitiffs should get mesne profits from a certain date until delivery of possession, the amount to be fixed in execution held that the decree was necessarily subject to the limitation laid down in sect 211 of the former Code and that mesue profits for more than three years could not be awarded even though possession was not delivered during that period (2) In executing a decree which awards mesne profits, and which is affirmed by a final Court of Appeal, the three years from the date of the decree until the expiration of which alone mesne profits are recoverable must be calculated from the date of the decree of the final Court of Appeal, and not from the date of the decree of the original Court (3)

Interest.—The Code of 1839 provided that interest might be decreed, (4) but the Code of 1882 first included interest in the definition of meson profits. There being no rule of law obliging the Court to allow interest upon meson profits it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, upon consideration of the facts, whether to allow interest or not (5). No difference should be made as rights interest between tensilal paid in kind and paid in money (6). A decree for interest on meson profits from the date they were ascertained was held to mean the date on which they were ascertained by the Court, and not by the Imm (7).

The words "together with interest on such profits" in the definition of meanprofits (see sect 2) do not refer to interest due after the ascertamment of the amount of mean-profits due under the decree, because the Courts have otherwise been given a discretion to award interest separately on the amount so ascertained. The words, therefore, contemplate that interest should form a separate item in the calculation of the amount due as mesne profits, and a decide holder is entitled to receive interest year by year on the amount found to be due, and not only on the imount actually ascertained and embodied in the decise (1). The Court has jurisdiction to give or refuse interest on mesne profits as it chooses. But if it does not intend to grant interest it should expressly refuse it, for, having regard to the additional words, "together with interest on such profits," a deene which merely grants mesne profits, and is silent as to interest, must be taken to mean that the mesne profits shall carry interest on them (2). Where a decree granted mesne profits and said nothing about interest, the amount of mesne profits being left for determination in execution of the decree. held, that the decree holder was entitled to interest upon the mesne profits due to him until such mesne profits were actually paid to him by the judgment debtors (3).

plantiff his an interest in the estate and that the defendant is an accounting party, and such a decree can only be averted by payment or the admission of assets and submission to a personal decree. But the Court has power to stay or dismiss frivolous or veatious actions, and will see whether there is bona fides, whether real and substitutal questions exist for determination, and whether an administration decree is the necessary and proper rehief (1). In such a case it is necessary to pass a preliminary decree, directing all such inquiries to be made and accounts taken which cannot be conveniently done in Court but which have to be carried out before the Court is in a position to pass its final decree. The first paragraph provides for this. An order under the first paragraph is a decree, and its appealable as such. See sect. 2, and, and notes thereto.

Insolvent estates.—The second paragraph of this rule is taken from sect 10 of the Judicature Act of 1875 [43 & 29 Vict c 77]. Before the Judicature Act, in administration in Chancity, a secured (redutor, who had not realized his security, could prove against the assets for the whole debt and receive a dividend his could then realize his security, and if he received in the whole more than 20s in the £, he paid over the excess. In bankruptcy he had to realize his security and prove for the balance. The Act made the rule in bankruptcy applicable to administration actions. It did not (nor does this section) apply ill this principles of bankruptcy to insolvent estates, but established uniformity of administration in respect of the four heads which are specifically mentioned in this section (2). A decree for administration is a decree in fivour of all creditors, and as all of them are included in the same decree, it is in quitable that one should be in a better position than another under that decree and therefore the Court divides the assets amongst them (3)

(b) if and in so far as the claims decreed are different in degree, that the claim of the inferior pre emptor shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre emptor

has failed to comply with the said provisions

Pre emption -Sect 214 Code of 1877 and 1889 amended as indicated in it ilies. The former section, which was frequently criticized is midequite, has been considerably altered. In sub clause (1), para (b), the day is fixed As to the power of the Appellate Court to specify another day, (1) see note As regards delivery of pessession in the same paragraph, the duty of executing and registering any necessary instrument (2) has been held to be upon the defend int In sub clause (2) provision has been made for the form of decrees in the end of claims decreed in favour of rivil pre emptors (3)

The Mahomedan law is the only system prevalent in India which provides substitutive rules relating to the right of pre emption in a systematic form, though local Acts and the Code recognize the existence of the right, and by down rules belonging to the remedy. In all cases in which the right of pre emption is claimed, the Courts in administering equity will by analogy follow the rules of Milhomed in law, even in cases where the right is not elimited under that law, but under local usage or custom The rules of customary pre emption no doubt depend upon the custom itself, but where such custom is silent upon my particular point, the rule of Wahomed in law must by in dogs be taken to be the rule of decision (1)

Rules in regard to decrees in pre-emption suits were formulated for the first time in the Code of 1877 and it is concer able that in introducing the c new rules the form which they took fell short of comprehending all the various cases that might are a miconsequence (5) Sect. 211 of the last Code thus laid down no rules is to the form of the decree in cases where rivil pre emptors, passessing equal rights of pre-emption, came forward to enforce the right in respect of the value sale, or where one of rival pre emptors possessed superior right of pre emption to the other. The Court had to deal with such cases upon general principles of equity suited to the exigences of each case (1). The section again provided only for cases where costs have been decreed against a plaintiff, but not for cases where costs, instead of being awarded against the pre emptor, were awarded in his favour by the decree. But it was held that there being no specific provision in the Code to meet this case, the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience were applicable and that under the general rules of set off, which are so consonant with these, a plaintiff was entitled, when depositing the purchase money under the decree, to deduct the sum awarded to him as costs (2)

The former section it was held, contemplated cases where the party seeking to enforce a right of pre emption is out of possession, and was therefore in applicable to instances in which parties setting up such a right were already in possession (3)

Payment of purchase money - If on the day on which the time for pay . ment expires the Court is closed the pre emplice price may be paid on the next day that the Court is open (4) If the pre emptive price is not paid within the prescribed time then as the right decreed is dependent on payment within such period, the decree for pre emption cannot be enforced (5) Where the plaintiff naid the money into Court, petitioning that it should be retained until mutation ol names had taken place and the defendant refused to accept the money on the ground that the payment was elogged with a condition, it was held that the pryment was not saddled with a condition precluding pryment before mutation and the objection was disallowed (6) In making the payment the plaintiff may deduct his costs (7) The question whether the plaintiff has paid the purchase money in time is not a matter relating to the execution of a decree under sect 211, corresponding with sect 47 ante (8) A decree in a suit directed that the nurchase money should be paid within a certain period from the date the decree became final. The period of huntation prescribed for in appeal from this dicree expired on a day when the Court was closed held that the appeal could be fded on the first day it opened and that the decree did not become final till then (9) A plaintiff who has obtained a decree can appeal within the limits tion perial whether or not he has made the payment on or before the day haed (10)

But the more appeal by a plaintiff or defendant will not of itself extend the time for payment (1) The Appellate Court may if it thinks fit extend the time for payment (2) But if the appellate decree says nothing about extending time it has not the effect of gring the plaintiff whether appellant or respondent, the corresponding period of time from the date of the appellate decree for payment to that which he had from the dute of the decree of the Court of first instance For this rule says that if the pre emptice price is not paid the suit shall stand dismissed and the decree, on the expiration of the time limited without payment by the plaintiff becomes a decree in favour of the defendant (3) (See first paragraph) If the pre emptine suit has arisen and been decreed before the vendee has paid the whole or part of the purchase money to the vendor, the Court in disbursing the purchase money deposited will make an order directing that the whole or part of the purchase money (as the case may be) should be paid to the vendor or vendee, both of whom must necessarily be judgment debtors and as such he liable alike to payment of the costs awarded to the pre emptor dicree) olde (4) It has been held that the profits of the property accounts between the date of the sile and the date when the pre emptor, in accordance with the decree paid the pre emptive price belonged not to the pre emptor nor to the original vendor, but to the original vendees (5) and that a suit could not be successfully maintained by a pie emptor to recover profits accrumbetween the date of his decree and the time when he obtained mutation of names (6)

Suits for partition -The former Code contained no provision definitely prescribing the form of a decree for the partition of an estate or the separation of a share, though a somewhat special procedure was rendered applicable in such cases Sect 265 of the Code relegated the actual partition or separation of revenue paying estates entirely to the execution department, and entrusted it to the Collector On the other hand, sect 396 of the same Code contemplated in the case of other unmoveable property a preliminary order ascertaining the rights of the parties, which was itself a decree, but involved a final decree upon the report of the Commissioners These sections have been in part modified, and the present rule, which is new, inserted. (3) A payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree

Applicability—As to the principle upon which the rule proceeds and the cases to which the prohibition contained in it is applieable see notes post. Remedies of judgment debtor. The rule applies only to the ease of parties who stand in the relation of judgment debtor and judgment creditor at the date of the transaction (1). It applies only to a question of payment or adjustment of a derice and does not recognize an application by the decree holder (2). The former section was held not to govern payments made in excention of decrees passed under let \(\) of 18.9 in the Revenue Courts (3).

"Under a decree "—In Madras it was at one time held that the former section applied only to the execution of money decrees (4) and it was doubted whether the section applied to decrees for restitution of conjugal rights (6). In Calcutta and latterly in Madras also it was held that the section dealt with the adjustment of any decree and not merely with the adjustment of amoney decree (0). The amendment by the addition of the words of any lind adapts this latter view. The decree may be of any lind but money must be payable under it is to instalment decrees see O NA r 11. The rule presupposes that there is a decree in existence. So where \(\frac{1}{2}\) such a but to file a special appeal when \(\frac{1}{2}\) considered the compromised the case and \(\frac{1}{2}\) very the property it was held that the compromised the case and \(\frac{1}{2}\) very the property it was held that the coupromise having here effected after the decree in favour of B had been eversed it need not have been certified to the Court (7). And if payment is made under a decree which is set avade on appeal the decree holder must make restitution even though the priment has not been certified (t). Where rent was payable for a mirror tenure and not under a decree, the provisions of the section were held mappheable (2). The rule does not apply to the case of a surety who having paid the amount due under the decree, if a rwards suce the principal (3)

"Out of Court"—The rule relates to voluntary adjustments of a decree made between parties to sent out of Court, and not to a case where a debtor pays to the other of the Court under the authority and pressure of the Court's process (1). When money as yield into Court the latter must pay it out immediately to the decree holder (5) or his ordinary legal hars, (6) though if the payment is made by the debtor to prevent his arrest, it is not a voluntary payment, and he is entitled to be he and before the money is paid out (7).

"Adjusted"—See as to the meaning of this term case cited (8) It only applies to matters occurring during the course of execution (9)

"The decree holder shall certify"—One joint decree holder is not bound by the sets of another who has compromised or received 1 syment out of Pourt, (10) and a joint decree holder has ordinarily no power to give a discharge out of Court to a judgment debtor for more than his own share of the decree (11) The debtor should therefore not pay unless jointly or to the extent of the identited shares (12)

The word "decree bolder" therefore must be read is decree holder or decree holders. The Court will not recognize a payment to one decree holder only in excess of that to which he is himself entitled. One of two or more jour decree holders is not competent without being inthorized by the other er other to certify sitisfaction by pryment out of Court of the entire decree, though he may certify satisfaction in respect of his own interest therein (13)

The orduary way of certifying a payment or adjustment is by petition (1) made by the decree (2) but it can also be certified under O XXI r 11, clause (c), on an application to execute the decree. (2) but it can also be certified under O XXI r 11, clause (c), on an application to execute the decree. His for the party applying for execution to state any adjustment after decree (3) If, however, one of the parties is a minor his guardian must first obtain leave to compromise under O XXXII r 7 (2) Application may be made for a certificate of part satisfaction (5). To certify a payment or adjustment within the meaning of the section, it is in sufficient for the decree bolder to certify that mone, has been paid or that an adjustment has been arrived at without specifying the amount of the payment or mentioning the terms of the adjustment (6). Under this rule as there is no time fixed within which the decret holder is hound to certify a payment made out of Court such payment may be certified at any time (7). Intimation to a Collector in charge of the execution under the provisions of the 1hrd Schedule, amounts to a due certifying of the adjustment under this rule (8).

It has been held that an application in 1905 for certifying payments in satisfaction of a decree sufficed to give a fresh start for limitation, either is an acknowledgment within the me ruing of Sect. 19 of the Limitation Act (1A of 1908) or as a step in and of execution (9)

"Judgment debtor"—The term includes persons cluming through the judgment debtor or in his right e g an assigner from the judgment debtor of the equity of red imption after decree (10)

Remedies of debtor—Under the second parasisph of the rule the judgment debtor may upply to the Court executing the decree (11) if the decree holder does not e rifig that the adjustment be recorded (12) and he is illowed mustly days within which to take that step (13). Notice must issue to the decree holder to show cause—this does not mean merely to allege cause nor even to make out that there is room for argument but both to illege cause and to prove it to the satisfaction of the Court (I) If the judgment debtor applies to certife and the application is refused, then an order under this rule leng appealable (a) under sect. 17 (formerly 211) he should appeal and not Iring a separate suit In application, whether by a plantiff or defendant, for a certificate, though decided under this rul, is none the less a question relating to the execution in l satisfaction of the decree, and in appeal being available no sequente sint hes If, however, neither the creditor ner debtor apply to certify and the decree has in fact been satisfied in whole or in part, and yet the crediter sucs out execution the debtor has a remedy by suit. As already observed, this rule prohibits recognition of in uncertified idjustment only by iny Court executing the decree But the right of suit is controlled by the provisions of sect 17, is the operation of the latter section is not restricted by this (3). The subject has nowhere been more lucidly treated than by Pagot 1(1) In considering whether a suit is prohibited by sect 17, regard must be had to two points, viz, the cause of action and the relief claimed Numerous cases establish (5) that a Court other than a Court executing the decree can recognize an uncertified payment or adjustment of a decree in a suit hased upon such payment or adjustment. This goes to the cause of action. The principle upon which such cases it allowed has been that there is a cause of action arising from negligence, fraud (b) agreement or trust (7) So suits have lain to recover the money paid or property delivered (8) or for damages (9) Where, however, the relief sought comes within the prohibition contained in s ct 17, then a suit is barred. That section is framed to prohibit in a separate sint between the parties to the decree, any relief being granted which shall interfere with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree (10) As a general rule, questions relating to the satisfaction of the decree must be settled by an order made in the course of execution and not by a regular suit, but no Court can settle a question of satis faction by an order made in execution unless such satisfaction shall have been duly certified (11)

If the creditor fraudulently executes a satisfied decree and does not entitle satisfaction in his application to execute he may be proceeded against criminally, the provision as regards uncertified adjustments not affecting the substantive Criminal Law (6). In a recent case it was held that an application which did not recite the terms of an alleged adjustment could not be deemed to be an application of the kind contemplated by the second clause of this rule (7).

Clause (3) —This clause corresponds with unendments (ude post), with the last paragraph of sect 258 of the former Code (see sect 206 of Code of 1859), which was inserted by sect 27 of Act VII of 1888. The effect of this insertion was that uncertified adjustments could be recognized by other Courts than the Court executing the decree, the prohibition only extending to Courts executing decrees (8) and to no others (9). So the rule does not debur a Criminal should, like the decree itself, he a matter of record and that unless it is made a matter of record no Court having to determine whether the decree has been executed shall recognize it as ovidence of a valid adjustment. But see Ramayyar: Ramayyar 21 V 336 (1897), where the Court went into the question of adjustment though not certified there having been a fraud committed.

"Filed."—The filing of the copies and certificate is quite distinct from executing the decree, for which an application should be regularly made.

Inquiry into jurisdiction.—The former sect 2.25 contained after the words "copies thereof" the following, "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," thus recognizing the right of the executing Court to inquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the detect (1). These words, however, have now been omitted, as it was considered that another Court ought not to go into any question as to the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it (5).

Sect. 38 enacts that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution under the provisious contained in the Code. Sect 39 provides that the Court which passed a decree (6) may, on certain conditions, send it, on the application of the decree-holder, for execution to another Court, and may of its own motion send it for execution to any Suhordinate Court. There is no express provision as to whether the Court to which a decree may be so sent must be a Court having jurisdiction over the amount of the suit in which the decree was passed or whether the mero sending of the decree will confer jurisdiction on a Court for all the proceedings then to the taken in its execution. On the ground, however, that sect 6 limits jurisdiction and that the word "suits" in that section include proceedings taken to execute the decree, the Calcutta and Bomhay High Courts hold that a Court which has no jurisdiction to try a suit can have no jurisdiction to execute a decree made in that suit (7). So a Court has no jurisdiction to execute a decree made in that suit (7). So a Court has no jurisdiction to execute a decree made in that suit (7).

(b) a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest in such property to the best of the belief of the applicant, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same

Description —Clause (a) has now been amended to expressly require boundaries and numbers to be given where such boundaries exist in a record of settlement or survey (1). The Code has been passed to be observed and not to be treated as a dead letter as regards this or any other provision (2). Still the Court will not press against a party a mere formal defect when the property which is sought to be attacked can be identified (3) and in any case a defect of description can be remoted (4).

Specification—In case of a joint family the application should state whether it is the judgment debtor's share or the joint family property which is sought to be attached. It should also specify the family property (6) The former section which this rule replaces required that the description and specification should be verified in the manner of a plaint. This has, however, been omitted as it was considered that a verification separate from that preserized by r. 11, second subsection, was not necessary. An omission to verify the inventory of property sought to be attached was held to be an irregularity only not virtuing the application (6)

Extract from Gollector's Register—The sections which this and the last replace, as also sect 213 of the Code of 1859, made it compulsory that the application should be accompanied by an extract. The rule has now been amended so as to give the Courts an option in requiring extracts, since these did not in all cases appear to be required but had the effect of adding to the expenses of legal proceedings. The rule is not restricted to land registered in

This section in the last Code (1) allowed one or more to apply for execution of the include decree unless execution is by the terms of the decree dependent upon a joint application (5). The ruling of the Prity Council (6) negatives decisions to the effect that a joint decree holder cannot apply for execution of a decree to the extent of his frictional interest (7). This can be done, provided that the interest is one determined by the decree itself. This is, of course, a different thing from applying separately for execution limited to what the applicant considers his interest in it (8). The words "or his or their representatives" have been omitted as this will be covered by the general clause. An order refusing to allow the decree to be executed by one joint decree holder.

order is immediately granted to execute the decree Sect 245 of the last Code, which the rule replaces, provided that the Court should reject such applications or allow their amendment This might be done then and there, or the application might be returned for amendment within a time fixed. If the application was not amended it was to be rejected, but if it was not rejected there was nothing to prevent the Court from extending the time for amendment (1) If amended, the application was admitted, and the Court proceeded to order execution according to the nature of the application The rule, in the first place, substitutes for the term "amended" the phrase the "defect to be remedied," hecause the first term does not cover the remedying of a defect, such as the omission to produce a copy as required by r 11, third sub section As regards the subjectmatter of the second sub section of this rule it was originally (in order to meet various difficulties which were raised regarding defective applications) proposed to enact that until an application returned under this rule was presented with such amendments as the Court might have required, it should not be deemed to he in accordance with law. This was proposed in view of a decision of the Calcutta High Court (2) The Select Committee, bowever, rejected this proposal and have relaxed the stringency of this rule and have allowed the application to date back to the time of its original presentation on the lines followed in connection with plaints It was proposed to enact that when once an application had been admitted it was to be deemed to be in recordance with law for the purpose of limitation, even though it was eventually dismissed after hearing the parties On the other hand, to prevent dismissals for defect of form not affecting the merits, it was proposed to allow the Court, even after admission, to allow any amendment not converting an application into one of another and inconsistent The suggested additions, however, have not been made Though under the previous Code, applications for execution were often allowed to be nuended without objection as to the Court's competency to allow it,(3) it was a matter of doubt whether the Court had any power to amend after admission and registration (4) In a recent case where within a short time of the expiration of the period of limitation a decree holder applied under this rule for leave to file a list of minoveable properties and his application was granted but the list was not filed till after the period had expired it was held that the proceedings in execution were harred by huntation (5) the judgment debtor can and ought to come in and ask that the attachment should be withdrawn from some particular portion of the project. Even if the order for attachment is wrong and excessive under this rule, the attachment as actually put is not without jurisdiction or null and void (1) decree obtained by F . A obtains a decree for Rs 100 ajainst F singly and applies for execution to the Court in which the joint decree is being executed F may treat his sout decree as a cross decree under this roll.

Applicability.- The rule contemplates that where a decree is sought to he set off against another, the decree against which the set off is asked for must be before the Court for execution (1) A judgment deliter is entitled to set off a decree whether the judgment creditor may or may not intend to object on appeal to the judgment debtor's decree, for a decree is a decree till it is reversed whether it be appealed or not (2) Should either decree he reversed in appeal the deeree of the Appellate Court can then be executed (3) The rule does not preclude a claim of set off of a sum due on a decree which is not under execution the rule being inapplicable to such a case (1) The transferee of a decree holds subject to equities enforceable against original holder (sect 49) The purchaser of a decree against which a cross decree may be set off, takes his deeree subject to the set off (5) Where there were cross decrees and one of the decree holders was, hy an order of Court, made with the consent of hoth parties. hound in executing his decree to set off the amount of the decree against him held that it would be inequitable to allow the other decree holder to obtain execution in full without setting off the amount decreed against him (6) In the under mentioned case a course was adopted which if not strictly in accordance with the letter, was in accordance with the spirit of this and the next rule, and at all events should be allowed on principles of natural equity (7)

"To a Court"—That is the Court to which the application is made for execution and which is dealing with the case as to whether execution shall be issued or not (8) The former section contained the words, "produced to the Court" This would seem still to be necessary as if all the decrees are not produced to the Court it will not have jurisdation over them all

"In separate suits"—The insertion of these words is intended to show that for the purposes of execution a counterclaim is not a separate action (9). This rule deals with cross decrees and not with cross claims under one decree. That is provided for by the next rule (10)

Cross claims -This rule proceeds on the same principle as the last, applying not where there are several decrees but one decree only. All that the decree holder is entitled to enforce execution of is the difference between the amount found recoverable by him and the amount which the indiment debtor is entitled to recover against him (1) The rule is not limited in its application to eases in which the remedy of each party against the other is of precisely the same nature (2) This rule does not apply to a case of pre emption but only to counter claims in smits for money, but the principle on which it is based is applicable, and under an order to deposit the purchase money costs may be deducted (3)

The provisions contained in rules 18 and 19 shall apply to decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge cross claims in mort gage suits

Mortgage suits -This rule is new It is inserted in order to make it clear that the provisions as to cross decrees and cross claims apply to the case of mortgage decrees (1) The rule also meidentally makes it clear that the expression "decree for the payment of money 'and other similar expressions in the Codo do not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for requiring him to show cause, on a date to be fixed, why the decree should not be executed against him;

Provided that no such notice shall be necessary in consequence of more than one year having clapsed between the date of the decree and the application for execution if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom execution is applied for, made on any previous application for execution, or in consequence of the application being made against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, if upon a previous application for execution against the same person the Conrt has ordered execution to issue against him.

(2) Nothing in the foregoing sub-rule shall be deemed to preclude the Court from issuing any process in execution of a decree without issuing the notice thereby prescribed, if, for reasons to be recorded, it considers that the issue of such notice would cause unreasonable delay or would defeat the ends of justice.

Notice—This rule is materially altered—Clauses (a) and (b) are the same as in the last Code—The Explanation to the corresponding section (248) of the last Code has been omitted and the second sub-section inserted, as it was represented that oven in the cases referred to in clauses (a) and (b) issue of the notice may involve an unreasonable delay or defeat the ends of justice—The Courts have thus been given a discretion in the matter—Where a judgment debtor appears and contests the decree holder's right to execute his decree he cannot object that no notice was served on him (1)—The notice should be addressed to the widow of a deceased Hindu who held joint undivided property along with his brothers, for it must be as quasi separate property that the attaching creditor had a claim to it (2)—As to proof of service of notice see below (3). As to whether the issuing of notice acts as a revivor within the meaning of art 180 of the Limitation Act, (4), and as to the time provided for by art 179 (5) see cases cited—The judgment creditor should ask for the execution of the decree and not for the issue of a notice, it being the duty of the Court to issue the notice (6)

If neither party appears on the day on which the notice under this sule is made returnable the application for execution can be dismissed (1). Under the last Code it was held that the issuing of notice was a condition precedent to the valid execution of a decree in eases falling within clauses (a) (2) and (b) (3). More recently, however, the Privy Council held that where the deliter and his estate were made properly subject to the decree, the fact that notice was given to the wrong person and sale took place without notice to the legal representative, though constituting a material irregularity, did not render the judicial sale a multity (4). Where a defendant respondent dues before judgment in appeal is pronounced, it may be entered nume protune, and the decree may be executed under this and cognate sections a gainst the hoirs of the decrees of without placing them on the record (5). An appheation to set aside a decree on the ground that the notice had not been served under this rule must be made under sect. 17, and not under r. 90 of this order, and can only succeed on proof that the omission to serve the notice caused substantial injury to the owner of the property sold (6).

"Court executing the decree."—It was held under the last Code that though the notice under sect 248, corresponding with this rule, must be assued by the Court to which the decree was transferred for execution, the application to execute against a legal representative should be made to the Court which passed the decree (7). But an emission to apply to the latter Court was held to be a mere irregularity (8). It has been held under the present Code that a notice under this rule is not required to be issued upon an application for transfer of a decree, and that such notice must be issued by the Court which has a true of the application for execution, whether it be the original Court which in de the decree or the Court to which the decree has been trussferred for execution [9].

Process for execution

24. (1) When the preliminary measures (if any) required by the foregoing rules have been taken, the Court shall, unless it sees cause to the contrary, issue its process for the execution of the decree.

(2) Every such process shall bear date the day on which its issued, and shall be signed by the Judge or such afficer as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court and delivered to the proper officer to be executed.

(3) In every such process a day shall be specified on or before which it shall be executed

Issue of Process.—This rule amalgamates with some alterations seeds 350 and 251 of the last Code, the first of which sections was amended by sect 3 of Act VI of 1886 by the introduction of the words "subject to the protisions of sect 245 a and 245 s," which have been now omitted Sects 245 a and 245 s are now seed 56 and r 37 of this order respectively. Probably the words "subject," etc, were omitted as unnecessary, as this or any other provision of the Code must be subject to other provisions contained in it. For the word "uterrant," the word "process" has been substituted, as being more exhaustive and familiar. It was pointed out under the last Code (4) that though in cases of the decree holder's default the Court might, under seet 250, suspend the issue of its warrant, that course, if adopted, would not bave disposed of the application for execution which would still remain undisposed of in the register of pending cases. A distress warrant issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, which has hen extended heyond the original date of return, but does not hear on the face of it the altered date, is not a legal warrant under this rule (1) See now as to default, r 57, post

It was held under the preceding section that a day had to be specified on or before which it was to be executed, and after that date no law ful order was in force (2) If the process is not signed by the Judge or other officer it is bad (3). The execution of the process may he delegated to unother by the officer to whom it is addressed the words "to be executed," seeming to imply that it was not intended that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him (4). An officir cannot arrist without having the warrant in his possession (5) As to proof of execution, (6) see below

25. (1) The officer entrusted with the execution of the Endorsement on pro process shall endorse thereon the day on, and, if the latest day specified in the process for the return thereof has been exceeded, the reason of the delay, or, if it was not executed, the reason why it was not executed, and shall return the process with such endorsement to the Court

Stay of execution.

26. (1) The Court to which a decree has been sent for when Court may stay execution shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court by which the decree was passed, or to any Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay the execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of first instance or appellate Court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto.

Stay of execution —Ordinarily a debtor once discharged after airest cannot be re arrested in execution of the same decree (2). Under the former (as under the present) Code, execution was stayed on the application or objection of the judgment debtor, to enable the latter to apply to the Court which passed the decree, or to a Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or its execution. This is necessary both to prevent precipitate execution when the decree itself or some order passed in execution is still under appeal, and also because the Court to which the decree bas been transferred for execution had no jurisdiction to decide certain matters. It has been held that an applicant can exclude the period of stay (even if the order only relates to a part of the decree, as, for instance, recovery of costs) in computing the period of limitation (3)

Security and conditions—Where a condition precedent is infringed, execution must continue as a matter of course, whereas conditions subsequent may be enforced like decrees. It has been held that an order for security in debter span for execution of the decree sent for execution.

"Shall prevent."—The words "order of restitution" have been added to bring the rule in conformity with the wording of the second clause of r 26 Ordinantly as their once discharged after arrest cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree (2). It has, however, also been hild, distinguishing the first, and disacnting from the second of the cases cited, that though the Code specifically provides for retaking of the person under certain defined circumstances, it does not follow from this that as condained simulation unistances forbidden (3). In any case this rule creates a specific exception.

28. Any order of the Court by which the decree was passed, or of suck Court of appeal as aforesaid, in relation to the execution of such decree, shall lake Court to be hinding upon the Court to which the decree was sent for execution.

"Binding"—The transfer of a decree to another Court for execution mounts to a qualified delegation of the powers possessed by the Court that passed the decree, in discharging its functions relating to the execution of that decree. Such delegation is, however, not complete, nor does it entirely divest the Court which transfers the decree of its powers and functions "in relation to the execution of such decree," for under 1.26 and the present rule the highest authority in some matters still rests with that Court notwithstanding the transfer, (1) and the ordinary Court of appeal would still exercise its jurisdiction in respect of any order passed by the Court to which a decree wassent for execution has essent 42, ante

Stay pending suit -The provisions of this rule are limited to staying execution, and have no reference to a case in which execution has already been carried out and the decree holder placed in possession of the property decreed to him (1) It was held under the last Code that the section was not limited to a Court executing its own deeree (2) An appeal hes from an order staying execu tion (3) The rule refers to the parties to the suits pending or about to be executed Execution cannot be stayed on the ground that a stranger to the decree impeaches it ou the ground of fried He should file a suit and obtain an injunction for the purpose (1) An award filed in Court under sect 11 of the Indian Arbitration Let is nothing more than an iward although it is enforceable as a decree and execution of an award cannot be stayed under this rule (5)

A, a person of little substance, creets a building which renders uninhabitable a family mansion belonging to B. A, in spite of his detention in prison and the attachment of his property declines to obey a decree obtained against him by B and directing him to remove the building. The Court is of opinion that no sum realizable by the sale of A's property would adequately compensate B for the depreciation in the volue of his maintoin. B may apply to the Court to remove the building and may recover the cost of such removal from A in the execution proceedings.

Decree for specific performance—Sect 200 of let VIII of 18,0 was divided up by Act X of 1877 mit two sections 259 and 260. To the latter section the Code of 1877 vided or for restriction of conjugal rights, altered "it shall be enforced to "I saked an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully foiled to obey it the deer e may be enforced, deleted from the earlier section the words "and keeping the same under attachment until further order of the Court, and added the second clause. By the Code of 1882 were added the words "and the tention from to the first clause the words "and the decree holder has applied to have the attacled property sold" to the second clause, and the whole of the last clause. The portions in takes as also the Illustration, were added by the pris int Code which also substituted an injunction has been passed" for "the performance of or abstention from any offer particular act, has been made, and "detendion in the citil prison for "imprisonment," and in claus 3 "d all for "moy," and in claus 4 or if made has been refused" for "and granted" This section is inapplicable to Parsees as far as restitution of conjugal rights are concerned (1)

"Restitution of conjugal rights"-These words were added to meet the objection raised in the case of Gatha Ram : Moohita Kochin, (2) though sect 200 of Act VIII of 1859, as it stood, was held to cover such a case (3) A person directed by a decree to refrain from preventing her daughter returning to her husband, and who permitted her daughter to reside in her house, is not thereby guilty of such interference as would justify execution under that section (4) The Court has now a discretion under O XXI r 33, in executing decrees for the restitution of conjugil rights. No provision is made for executing a decree for the recovery of a wife in this or the preceding rule, as no such decree can be made Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband, the latter may obtain an injunction against him which may be enforced in the manner provided by this rule

"For an injunction "-A decree directing the removal of certain obstruc tions in a pathway can only be enforced as directed by this rule and not by directing the Court Ameen to remove the obstructions, (5) similarly in regard to a decree duecting the removal of a building , (6) or one for removal of obstruc tion to light and air, (7) but see sub clause (1) and the Illustration to this rule Each breach of a perpetual injunction may be enforced under this rule (8) A decree settling a scheme for the future management of a temple should be executed in accordance with this rule , (9) so where the decree directed certain property to be jointly insuaged by the plaintiff and defendant and both their names to appear in all papers connected with the same on the defendant disobeying the Court can direct attachment of his property (10) A decree ordering delivery of certain moveables and declaring title to certain rights is not incapable of being executed under this rule as being merely a declaratory decree, (11) but a decree ordering that payment in kind accruing after the decree he from time to time given is too indefinite for execution (12) An order for the refund of money, awarded under the Land Acquisition Act and wrough paid out, should be (xecuted under sect 145 rather than under this rule (13)

attachment of the person or property of a recalcitrant judgment debtor in England this mode of execution has been put an end to by the enactment of the Matrimonial Clauses Act, 1881, 17 & 48 Vict c 68 (cf sects 2-4) It has been considered that some relaxation of the provision in force in India is desirable, but that it was doubtful whether it should go as far as this For the present Courts have been given a discretion in the matter, and they have been enabled to follow a procedure slightly adapted from the English practice in cases in which attachment and imprisonment appear mappropriate

(1) Where a deeree is for the execution of a docu ment or for the endorsement of a negotiable Decree for execution instrument and the judgment debtor neglects of document or endorsement of negotiable inor refuses to obey the decree, the decree holder may prepare a draft of the document or endorsement in accordance with the terms of the decree and deliver the same to the Coint

(') The Court shall thereupon cause the draft to be served on the judgment debtor together with a notice requiring his object tions (if any) to be made within such time as the Court fixes in this behalf

(3) Where the judgment debtor objects to the draft, his object tions shall be stated in writing within such time, and the Court shall make such order approving or altering the draft, as it thinks fit

(4) The decree holder shall delines to the Court a copy of the draft with such alterations (if any) as the Court may have directed upon the proper stamp paper if a stamp is required by the law for the time being in force, and the Judge or such officer as may be appointed in this behalf shall execute the document so delnered

(5) The execution of a document or the endorsement of a negotiable instrument under this rule may be in the following form namely -

(or as the case "C D, Judge of the Court of may be), for A B, in a suit by E F against A B and shall have the same effect as the execution of the document or the endorsement of the negotiable instrument by the party ordered to execute or endorse the same

(6) The Court, or such officer as it may appoint in this behalf, shall eause the document to be registered if its registration is required by the law for the time being in force or the decree holder desires to have it registered, and may make such order as it thinks fit as to the payment of the expenses of the registration extended to cover optional as well as compulsory (1) registration, and an order for the payment of expenses of either kind may presumably be summarily enforced in the execution department. The Registrar of the High Court can if directed by thist Court execute a conveyance on behalf of a party refusing so to do so as to pass his estate, but he cannot enter into a covenant on his behalf (2). Objections to draft conveyances or draft endorsements can be made the subject of appeal under O XLIII r 1 (c) able property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his bebalf, and, if necessary, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property

(2) Where a decree is for the joint possession of immoreable property such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the varrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some contentent place,

the substance of the decree

(3) Where possession of any building or enclosure is to be delivered and the person in possession, being bound by the decree, does not afford free access, the Court, through its officers, may, after giving reasonable varning and facility to any woman not appearing in public according to the customs of the country to withdraw, remove or open any lock or both or break open any door or do any other act necessary for pulling the decree holder in possession

"Decree!—The decree should describe the land accurately so as to avoid any objection (3) in execution as regards the lands covered by it. Possession should not be given unless it is so ordered by the decree (4). If the plaintiff is entitled to possession it should be given him. He cannot be compelled to accept compensation against his will (5). When a decree is obtained for possession that decree should be executed and a second suit will not be for the jurgose (6). Where an adverse title is unsuccessfully set up the plaintiff is intitled to ad cree for khas possession under this ruk. (7) and having set up his in a living title.

Possession -Possession may be actual or formal or, as it is often called symbolical poss soion. The delivery of possession which is directed to be given by this rule is the placing of the decree holder in actual possession, which act may involve the dispossession of some other. Whilst this rule relates to the d livery of what is known as thas or immediate or direct possession the following rule provides for the case where the immoveable property is in the occupancy of a tenant or of some other p rson entitled to occupy the same Formal delivery of possession consists in the reading by the officers on the land of the order for putting the decree holder in possession and taking a receipt from Whether what occurs on the occasion of giving delivery has the effect of dispossession is a question which must be decided on the evidence (4) It has been held that the delivery of formal possession in execution of a decree for noss ssion gives a cause of action against a defendant who remains in occupation of the possession which may be enforced in a regular suit (5) Rules 97 and 98 provide for my resistance or obstruction to the delivery of possession complained of by the decree holder, and r 100 to any complaint on the part of a third party is to his being dispossessed in execution of the decree. Where in execution of a decree a person not a party to the suit is dispossession does not give him a caus of action within the purisdiction of the Mamlatdar Rule 100 (formerly sect 333) applies (6)

Undivided share -Difficulty was often felt (5) in executing a decree obtained by the proprietors of an undivided share in immoveable property for Mas possession The second sub clause of this rule now regulates this matter Thus where a decree holder in execution of her decree purchased an undivided share in a house which the judgment dehtor owned jointly with a third person and the judgment-dehtor resisted her attempt to get possession it was held that on the construction of this rule with r 95 of this Order the decree holder was entitled to have him removed from the premises (6)

Occupancy of tenant -In order to a legal possession being given under this rule it is essential that all its requirements should be earried out (1) But if the party in possession when the decree is being executed admits to the Court that the decree holder has formally obtained possession, he cannot afterwards ple id a title by adverse possession, denying that the decree holder ever received possession (2) " The substance of the decree in regard to the property" which must be proclaimed to the occupant may or may not be a declaration that the decree holder is the immediate I indlord of the occupant, and as such entitled to receive cent directly from him, as there may be an intermediate holder Probably both the intermediate tenant as well as the cultivating tenant or actual occupant would come within the terms of the rule (3) In executing a decree under this rule the Court should confine its action strictly to the terms of the law, and should not add to the decree an order directing the ryots to pay rent to the decree holder (4)

If such rights are not exercised before the presentation of a petition in insolvency they will not create a title so as to prevail against that of the Official Assigned un ler the vesting order (1) Until a dehtor receives a notice under this rule he is bound to pay his judgment creditor, and it is no part of his duty to inquire whether his creditor is or is not cutifled to receive the money (2) The payment of a cheque given before notice of attachment cannot be stopped (3) In Lugland an order for attachment does not are the judgment creditor a charge until it is served (1) and there is no difference between the service of an order niss and of an order shoolute (a)

- Where the property to be attached consists of the share or interest of the judgment debtor in moveable in moveables property belonging to him and another as co owners, the attachment shall be made by a notice to the judgmentdebtor prohibiting him from transferring the share or interest or charanna it in any uay

company or local authority, as the case may be, while the judgment debtor is within the local limits to which this Code for the time being extends and while he is beyond those limits if he is in receipt of any salary or allowances payable out of His Majesty's Indian recenues or the funds of a valuay company carrying on business in any part of British India or local authority in British India, and the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, shall be liable for any sum paid in contraiention of this rule

Attachment of salary, etc -In the Report upon the Bill it was pointed out that the provisious here enacted are not altogether a novelty in the history of execution Officers of the Army serving in this country, whether they do or do not helong to the Indian forces, are public officers within the meaning of the Code Under sect 151 (3) of the Army 1ct (14 & 15 Vict e 58) such officers were hable to stoppage of one half of their pay in execution of decrees and such orders remained in force wherever the judgment debtor was in India When this provision was repealed as a sequel to the abolition of the Courts of Request an addition was made to sect 136 by the Army (Annual) Act 1890 to legalize deductions authorized by any law passed by the Governor General of India in Council This provision in view of the definition of "public officer placed military and civil officers on the same footing for the purposes of attach ment under the Code of Civil Procedure Owing to the comparatively more frequent and rapid transfers of military officers to places at a considerable dis trace attention has been directed somewhat more pointedly to an inconvenience which to a greater or smaller extent is experienced in connection with the various hranches of the public services in India A public officer, whatever the amount of his indehtedness remains by virtue of statutory exemption in enjoyment of one moiety of his salary while his creditor, hy reason of the application of the provisions relating to local jurisdiction, must follow him from Court to Court all over the country with troublesome and expensive applicatious for transfer and attachment It has moreover been represented that a tradesman at distance ought not to be burdened with responsibility for tracing out the actual officer disbursing the salary and it is possible in practice for a public servant acting as his own paymaster to place the most serious obstructions in the way of execution In these circumstances a reversion has been made, in substance to the provisions of seet 151 sub seet (3) of the Army Act which have been extended to all public officers, railway servants and servants of local authorities and the responsibility is cast on the Government or the company or authority concerned for making its arrangements for receiving notice and for effecting the proper deduction As a corollary to these provisions it is behaved that the order may reasonably be declared effective not merely while the judgment debtor is in India but while he is in receipt of emoluments from the Indian revenues or from the funds of an Indian local authority or of a Rulway Compan) calrying on business in British India

Salary or allowances -Ihis rule is new though it I artly includes the provisions in the list three clauses of sect 268 of Act XIV of 1882. There is no inconsistency between it and the explanation to sect 64 (1)

"Within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction"—Under the other Codes, which contained no such provision as this, it was held that a Provincial Small Cause Court could not directly attach the salary of a public officer disbursed outside its jurisdiction, (3) nor that of a railway servant when not actually due disbursed outside such jurisdiction (3). This rule provides a special rule in the case of certain judgment delitors because r. 46 does not entitle the execution Court to attach a delit payable by a non resident outside the jurisdiction (4).

"May order that the amount shall be withheld"—The order should also prohibit the public officer or servant from receiving the amount of the salary attached (5)

It cannot be signed against one partner separately for default of appearance (2) But it has been held in England that where judgment has been recovered against the firm, the plaintiff is not confined to the remedy given by this rule but may still bring an action on the judgment against the individual members of the firm without any special leave of the Court (3) \quad \text{plaintiff having obtained judgment against a firm cannot by subsequent service of the writ render the person served liable as a partner hereunder. He must apply under this rule (4)

Infant partner -It has been held by the House of Lords (5) (a) that an infant can be a partner in a firm (b) that though a partner he cannot contract debts by trading and is not therefore liable for the debts of the firm . (c) that the adult partner is entitled to insist that all the assets of the partnership shall be applied in payment of the liabdities of the partnership and until this is done the infant partner has no claim on them . (d) that a judgment against a firm containing an infant partner and bankruptcy proceedings based upon such judgment must specifically exclude the infant partner (6) The form of judgment in such a case therefore is in England as follows Adjudged that the plaintiff recover against the defendant firm other than A B an infant partner, etc (7) On a judgment so worded, execution issues as of course on the property of the firm irrespective of the question of infancy of any member thereof , and semble, even if the sole member of the firm were an infant the right of the plaintiff to issue execution against the goods of the firm would not be affected. But no execution can issue against the private property of the infant partner It would seem to follow from the above that an infant partner could not be served as a partner though semble the firm might be served by service on him as the person in control of the husiness It would seem also to follow that an infant partner can neither appear nor defend as a partner (8)

"Execution may be granted "—See also O XXX rr 6 8 supra as to subsequent proceedings No execution can issue against any partnership property except on a judgment against the firm. Where a partnership was dissolved as to A and afterwards an action was instituted against the firm for a debt contracted before the dissolution but A was not served with the writ and had no notice of the action till after judgment it was held that his liability must be determined before the judgment could be enforced against him, and a debtor summons founded on the judgment was dismissed (1). A partner so situated crimot now be made hable unless he has been served with the writ (2). But where there had been a dissolution under an order by consent in the Chancry Division, and a receiver appointed of the partnership property, and subsequently a judgment in the King's Bench Division was recovered for a debt accuracy alice after dissolution, it was held that a charging order on the property of the firm in the hands of the receiver was valid, and could not be set aside by partners who had not heen served with the writ (3). Where the action is between a firm and one or more of its members or between firms having one or more members in common, no execution can issue without an order (4). Where a judgment is recovered by a firm sung in the firm maine, and afterwards one of the partners dies the surviving partner may issue execution by leave hereunder (5).

"Shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect"—These and the preceding and following words of the rule limit in England the operation of a judgment against a firm to (A) partnership property within the juris diction, (2) (B) the private property of any partner who was within the juris diction when the writ was issued and his become hable to execution under (a), (b), or (c) of this rule, (C) the private property within the jurisdiction of any partner who was out of the jurisdiction when the writ was issued but who has become hable to the jurisdiction of the Court list by appearing to the writ, or 2ndly by failing to appear after being duly served outside the jurisdiction, or having been served with the writ within the jurisdiction and having failed to appear. The present rule ormits reference to jurisdiction in clause (a) and clause (4) has been simplified in the manner appearing.

The rule in England as regards joint contractors has been thus stated (3) "An action and a judgment against some of several joint contractors is a bar to subsequent proceedings against the remainder of them on the same contract (4) And this holds good when the joint contractors are partners in a firm (5) sucd not in the firm name but as individuals. A judgment against a firm sucd in the name of the firm is a judgment against all the partners in the firm (6). Indeven where partners are sued together by their names and not in the name of the firm judgment against one is no bar to continuance of the action against the others (7). But a judgment entered by consent against one joint contractor if pleaded is a har to further proceedings against others (8). And it has been held that where one of two joint contractors gave a cheque for the amount of the joint debt and was sued to judgment on the dishonoured cheque the action and judgment were no bar to a subsequent action against the other joint contractor on the original contract (9). Since the passing of that Act a judgment obtained against some only of the joint contractors, and remaining unsatisfied, is no bar to a second suit on the contract against the other joint contractors.(3)

Unless summons has been served.—Partners carrying on business within the jurisdiction may he sued in the name of the firm (O. XXX. r. 1); service within the jurisdiction is to be deemed good service on the firm whether any members are out of the jurisdiction or not (b. 2, 3).

Attachment of negotiable instruments of deposited in a Court, nor in the custody of a public officer, the attachment shall be made by actual scieure, and the instrument shall be brought into Court and held subject to further orders of the Court.

Property in Court's custody.—This rule corresponds with sect. 237 of Act VIII. of 1859, save that in such section the property in deposit was described as property which "shall consist of money, or any security." It is similar to sect. 272 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882, save for the slight verhal alterations indicated in italics. The rule does not apply to a case where the property sought to be attached has, under the decree being executed, been declared the property of

Sub rule (4) -This refers to decrees other than money decrees, (5) and under the previous Code, where the wording of this clause ran, "In the case of all other decrees, it was held to include decrees for redemption (6) and decrees for sale of immoveable property under sect 88 of the Transfer of Property Act (7) The present rule, however, excludes decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge as well as decrees for the payment of moncy from the operation of this olause When "the Court which passed the decree 'attaches its own decree, it may execute such decree on the application of the attaching creditor (8) In the provious Code this clause concluded with the words, "Every Court receiving such notice shall give effect to the same until it is so cancelled", that is, to abstain from executing the decree The Court receiving the notice cannot substitute in the record of the decree heing attached the judgment creditor for the judgment-dehtor in the decree being executed (9) part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the court-house, and also, where the property is land paying revenue to the Government, in the office of the Collector of the district in which the land is situate.

Mode of attachment of immoveable property.—The first clause of the present rule corresponds with sect 235 of Act VIII of 1859, the wording being practically the same. The present form was adopted by sect 271 of Act X of 1877, save that the words "taking any benefit from such transfer or charge" have been substituted for "receiting the same from him by purchase, gyft, or otherwise. The remaining clause corresponds with portions of sect 239 of Act VIII of 1859. In that section the words were "the written order shall be read out." This was altered by sect 274 of Act X of 1877 to "the order shall be proclaimed," which Act added the words "by best of drum or other customary mode" and "paying receive to Government." Certain virbal alterations have been made as shown in itshes

"Where the property is Immoveable '- Decrees for money charged on land are immoveable property (1). A decree for redemption cannot be attached innder this rule, but under O XM r 53 (2). A debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property should be attached under this rule and not under O XM r 16, (3) later cases have however, held that such a debt, especially if the mortgagee is not in possession is not immoveable property, and need not be attached under this rule. (1) it most omission to attach under this rule is an irregularity (5)

It has been recently held that in the cise of a jurely usufructuary mort, he where there is no debt payable by the mortgager the procedure should be by attachment (under this rule) of the interest in minows the jet perity (b). An ittichment is not necessary in execution of a mertgage decice, where the decice continus a direction for sale (7). When this point was raised before the Privy Council they would not go into it and held a sale without attachment in execution was good on the ground that the project call all best attached unification for a direction was good on the ground that the project call all best attached unification for a direction of a decree carries with it its secretive we that attaching the mortgaged property under this rule (1) The equity of redemption of a mortgagor can be attached under this rule, the attachment being by order prohibiting the judgment dehtor from dealing with it in any way and all persons from receiving it, such order being proclaimed and notified as therein directed (2) The execution of mortgage decrees are now governed by O XXXIV, but prior to the present Code they were governed by the sules made under the Transfer of Property Act in Bengal and Assam (3) The life interest of a Hindu widow under her husband's will in the income of his immoveable estate is immoveable property and is attachable (4)

"By an order prohibiting."-This should be the procedure where the property sought to be attached is a factory in the possession of a prior mortgagee, and not by putting peons in possession (5) The prohibitory order does not have the effect of dispossessing the judgment dehter (6) For form of prohibitory order, see the First Sched App E No 8

"The property."-Where an attachment was made of the debtor's sbare without specifying the share, it was held only to cover the share and not the whole property (7)

"Proclaimed."—Omission of the beat of drum was held to be a material megularity, and the sale was cancelled (8) Objections as to irregularities in the proclamation cannot be taken on appeal to the PC for the first time (9)

"Decree-holders' default."—It was pointed out (1) that the last Code did not contain anything like a complete procedure for proceedings in execution It did not suggest what procedure should be adopted in cases analogous to those which might occur during the hearing of a suit and which were provided for by Chapter XIII of that Code Further, it was clear, both from the Code itself and from the provisions of the Limitation Act, that the Legislature contemplated that there might be a succession of applications for execution (2) Where final orders adjudicating upon the right to have execution have been made, the principle of res judicata is applicable (see sect 11) (3) But under the former practice an application for execution might be made but might not be proceeded The Code did not prohibit an application for execution where a former application to that effect had been withdrawn without liberty to present a fresh one (4) Nor. as stated, did it provide for cases where the application could not proceed for default of the decree-holder Io such cases a practice arose, with the object of disencumbering the files of the Court, of "striking off" applications It was frequently pointed out that this practice was not justified by the Code. (5) and that there were (apart from the question of adjournment) only two ways of judicially disposing of any application, that is, by granting or dismissing it in whole or in part (6) The effect of an order "striking off" was discussed in numerous cases. An attachment was not necessarily at an end because the execution case was struck off the file The effect of such an order depended on the circumstances of the case (7) There was no general rule as to the effect of striking off an execution case from the file (8) Such an order did not necessarily put an end to the attachment, and it was competent for the Court to make such an order and at the same time continue the attachment (9) It was open to the decree holder to revive the execution proceedings and continuo it from the point where it had previously stopped (10) Where hy a mistake of the Court

an application for execution against attached property was dismissed, but there wis no order removing the attachment, and the decree-holder obtained a review, and the executing Court was directed to proceed, it was held that the attachment subsisted as against a sale made by the judgment debtor previous to the review (1)

The "striking-off" or shelving of an execution application thus admitted of different interpretations according to the eigenmetanees. It might have the effect of killing the particular application without any adjudication on the merits. So if such an order was passed in consequence of some default of applicant not going to the merits of his right to have satisfaction of his decree (eg default in appearance, failure to pay process fees, or to put in copies of papers called for, etc), in such cases though the order might put an end to the particular application in which it was passed, it did not bar a subsequent application for execution if it were made within the period of limitation (2) Further, as sect 158 of the Code of 1882 did not apply to execution-proceedings, there was no statutory provision for cases of decree-holder's default (3) If, on the other hand, such an order was passed on the merits of the application eg by a finding that the decree had been satisfied or that execution was buried by some provious order which would operate as ses judicata then so far as the Court executing the decree was concerned, the application was taken to have been finally disposed of in a manner adverse to applicant's right to have the decree executed, and no further application for execution could be entertained unless in pursuance of a successful appeal (4) In these cases the effect of the order was to render the decree dead and incapable of execution or further execution

Investigation of claims and objections

Investigation of claims to, and objections to attachment of, attached property.

(1) Where any claim is preferred to, or any objection is made to the attachment of, any property attached in excention of a decree on the ground that such property is not hable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the elam or objection with the like power as regards the examination of the elamant or objector, and in all other respects, as if he was a party to the suit

Provided that no such investigation shall be made where the Court considers that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed.

(2) Where the property to which the claim or objection applies has been advertised for sale, the Court ordering the sale may postponent pending the investigation of the claim or objection

- 59 The claimant or objector must adduce evidence to Evidence to be adduced by claimant. Show that at the date of the attachment he had some interest in, or was possessed of, the property attached
- 1 60 Where upon the said investigation the Court is Release of property satisfied that for the reason stated in the from attachment claim or objection such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment debtor or of some person in trust for lim, or in the occupancy of a tenant of other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in this for some other person, or pratty on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall make an order releasing the property, wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment
- 1 61 Where the Comt is satisfied that the property was,

 Disallowance of claim at the time it was attached, in the possession to properly attached of the judgment debtor as his own properly und not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenint of other person plying lent to him, the Comt shall dis allow the claim

62 ll'here the Court is satisfied that the property is is continuance of attach ment subject to claim of some person not in possession, and thinks intermediate. Subject to such mortgage or charge.

63 ll'here a claim or an objection is preferred, the party is saving of suits to a significant whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Applicability—It 58 states that the investigation is to take place as if the climant or objector—was a parts to the sut". That is it assumes that the climant is not a parts. Clims of third prices only are dealt with inder that rule. This rule page is statutor in his of suit to the unsuccessful party in claim proceedings (1). Questions between the parties to a suit are dealt with under sect. 17 (2). The cases just cited establish the principle though is regards its application in the instances dealt with by them reference must now be made to the amendments made in sect. 21 of the last Code by sect. 17 of this. Where the case falls under sect. If there is an appeal other uses not. Where a judgment debtor alleged that he was in possession of attached property only as Shebout of a dirty it was held that the case did not fall within sect. 47 (3). A judgment-debtor who is not in fact a party to the claim proceedings does not in the ope of the Irak become such by reason solely of his being the judgment debtor (4). These provisions apply only where the property sought to be sold has been attached in execution but not where the decree has ordered its sale (5).

The provisions of the Code are permissive. They do not impose an obliquion on persons having claims to prefer to property attached to prefer them during execution and annex in ease of future to do so forfeiture of their right to establish their title to the property by a regular suit (1) These provisions do not deprive a claimant of his iemedy by suit but give him a more speedy and summary remedy (2) If he avails himself of it the Court is bound in a proper case where the claim is made at a proper time that is before sale, (3) to make an inquiry, and can be compelled by application in revision to do so (4) His remedy by suit is also optional, and if he does not choose to avail himself of it, a sale will give him a fresh cause of action with a new period of limitation (5)

These provisions were held not to apply to the case where a person served with a prohibitory order applies to have the attachment raised on the ground that the debt attached did not exist (6) It has been held that the application of the Official Assignce to release the property of an insolvent debtor falls within these provisions (7) If the dobtor is declared insolvent and a receiver is appointed this does not prevent a person claiming (8) It was beld that seet 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars a claim under these provisions to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon, in all cases and its operation is not confined merely to claims to the tenure or holding but extends to claims based on the ground that the property claimed does not form part of the tenure or holding attached (9) The word "suit 'in sect 55 of the Court of Wards Act includes miscellaneous proceedings, and therefore if a claim is preferred by the Manager of the Court of Wards without the sanction of the Court of Wards the order disallowing the claim is not hinding upon the Ward of Court (10) As to whether the amendment of sect 28 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act by Art IV of 1906 affects these provisions in relation to claims to tiled huts, see case cited (11)

An objector may raise an objection to an attachment not only on the ground that he is in possession of the property attached, but also on the ground that he has an interest in it, and it has been held that where an executing Court dis illows a claim under sect 231 of the last Code (now represented by r 61 of this Older) it has mirelation to do so, not with studing that it erroneously reframe from going into the question of possession and disallows the objection on some other ground (1). Rules 58 and 60 of this Order speak of claims to attached property and the release of property from attachment, but they do not justify the conclusion that if moveable property of a perishable nature has been attached and a claim has been preferred to it, the claim must prove nugatory if the decree holder can induce the Court to sell the property before the claim has been investigated (2). The true aim of an attachment is to place the property in the custody of the Court so as to make it available for the realization of the decree. If by reason of the dismissed of the suit or the default of the decree holder the Court dissolves the attachment, the property ceases to be in its custody. The Court cannot take it back into its custody so as to prejudice a title acquired in the interval (3).

Property.—The rules relate to claims preferred to and objections made to the attachment of "any property" attached Sect 266 of the last Code (now 60) specifies a debt as one species of property which is hable to attachment, and sect 268 of that Code (now O XXI r 46) prescribes the mode in which a debt is to be attached Debts and other species of intangible property are therefore not excluded (4) such as an equity of redemption (5)

The word "property" as applied to land does not simply mean land but the share or interest in land attached. It includes undivided shares in land So where property belongs to two persons jointly, and in execution against one anything more than his right and interest in the property are attached, the other joint holder has a right to come in and claim that the attachment may be removed quoed his share (6)

The section in the last Code was held inapplicable to claims to property directed to be sold by a mortgage decree (7) and provision was made in sect 283 of that Code (now r 62) for the continuance of attrehment subject to claim of incumbrancer Though the execution of mortgage decrees is expressly incorporated in the Code the Select Committee were of opinion that claims and objections arising out of the execution of such decrees should not be the subject of summary procedure under these rules, but should be determined in the ordinary course. This, however, does not imply that the procedure under the later rules as to resistance to possession or dispossession does not apply. I mortgagee who was in possession of the mortgaged property when it was attached in execution of a decree against the mortgage, was held intitled to claim that the ittachment should be withdrawn (1). Where certain property was attached under sect. 13 (3) of the Promerial Insolvency Act of 1907 before the petitioner was declared an insolvent and a receiver appointed, it was held that under 158 the Court was bound to hear and adjudicate upon any claims preferred by persons alleging themselves to be the owners of such property (2).

Court has to determine the question of possession only, and cannot go into the question of title with respect to the property taken in attachment (1). If the possession of the person holding the property is on his our account the fact that the judgment-debtor may have a beneficial interest or some title in it cannot be gone into (2). The worlds "possession" and "possession in the last Code were held in it to be used in a restricted sense as relating to more tangible or playsical possession, but to include constructive possession or possession in law of debts and other intangible property (3). The onus is on the applicant to prove this claim, and he must begin (1). His explaned which may be of any kind sufficient for the purpose (3) and must be received (6) should be confined to his own claim and not to establish the right of a third party (7). Where in objection has been made and disable of it cannot be renewed by the same person in the same attachment (8).

Order of Gourt.—Rules 60 and 61 specify the cases in which the Court is to allow or disallow a claim. R 59 deal with the evidence to be addited by the claimant, and it was held that to reconcile the sections the words, "some interest, were to be till in to imply such in interest as would make the possession of the judgment-dichter possession not on his on a account but on account of or in trust for the claimant. The rules relating to claims to attached property provide for a summary investigation into possession. The question of till is required to be gone into only so fir is may be necessary to determine whether the person in possession was so as agent of or as trustee for another (9). Seet 280 of the last Code (now r 60) was held to refer to cases in which the possession of a claimant as trustee was of such a character as to be really the possession of the debtor and not to eases in which intrease questions of I'm might arise as to whether or not valid trusts on the result in particular instances the real question to be determined being that of possession (16)

Under 1 60 the conditions upon which the property is to be in whole or in part released are. (a) that the property was not when attached in the possession of the judgment debtor, or of some person in trust (1) for him, or in the occupance of a tenant or other person paying rent to hun, or (b) that being in the posses sion of the judgment debtor at such time it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust (2) for some other person or party (3) in his own account and partly on account of some other person. It is not necessary (to defeat the claim) to prove that the trust is one capable of enforcement by law (4). The claim is disallowed under r 61 if the property was in the possession of the judgment debtor as his own or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of his tenant.

The Court has to "make an order for releasing the property wholly or to such an extent as it thinks fit from attachment" The order is passed after investigation of the claim of the objector (5). It must be made before the sale has taken place, for upon the sale the application terminates upo facto (6). When the property of the insolvent judgment debtor, which was attached, had vested in the Official Assignee during the pendency of claim proceedings, it was held that the latter was not a necessary party and that the decree ought only to declare that the property belonged to the judgment debtor and not to declare it liable to attach ment (7). Where the claimant paid the amount of the decree and got the property released, the Court was held to have no jurisdiction to make an order for repay ment (8). Where the Court was, after such investigation, of opiniou that the property attached ought not to be sold, the proper order was one simply releasing the property from attachment, (9) the order being one made with reference merely to the particular claimant who has obtained the order (10). The rule contemplates brought by the owner against the purchaser, the execution creditor is properly made a party, the object being to restore all parties to the position which they occupied previously to such attrehment and sale, (1) and if the claimant further desires related by partition all the owners should be made parties (2). As to the position of the debtor in a suit by the creditor, see ante.

Whether the suit is to be brought in the Ordinary or Small Cause Court depends upon the nature of the claim and the right sought to be enforced (3) The judgment-debtor is not a necessary party (4) Where an application was decreed with costs to be paid by the decree-holders, and the latter were declared in a subsequent suit to be entitled to sell the property, but no relief was asked in regard to the costs, it was held that they could not be refunded by the Court executing the decree (5) The effect of a successful suit at the instance of an attaching cieditor is to set aside the order of release and to restore the state of things which it had disturbed (6) An application to revive a previous application for execution, which has been temporarily suspended by an order under these provisions, is, according to the Calcutta, Bombay, and Allahabad High Courts, governed by Art 178 of the Limitation Act (7) A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the valuation of the subject matter of the suit is the amount for which the attachment was made (8) The Privy Council have recently determined that a suit under 1 63 falls within clause 1, Art 17, Sched II . Court Fees Act, and a Court fee of Rs 10 is payable thereon (9)

"The right which the plaintiff claims to the property in dispute," means the right which is claimed in the proceeding in respect of the property that is, the right to have it sold or the right to have it released from attachment. They do not mean the right or title to the property. When, therefore, a claimant, being unsuccessful in a claim, has got the property released from attachment by coming to terms with the decree-holder, without notice to the judgment debtors, a suit subsequently brought by him against the judgment-debtors for recovery of possession is not barred (10)

"Subject to the result of such sult."—When property has been released from attachment and subsequently declared hable to attachment by a decree against which an appeal is pending, a sale of such property before the final result of the appeal is not illegal (1)

"The order shall be conclusive."-Where an order has been passed unless a suit is brought, the unsuccessful party cannot assert his right in any capacity, whether as pluntiff or defendant, (2) and he is presented from pleading adverse possession at the date of the order (3) The conclusiveness exists only as regards the particular property in dispute (4) Theorder is conclusive subject to the other provisions of the Code, such as those relating to review (5) and revision (6) On the same principle matters finally heard and decided earnot be reopened on a second application, (7) hut it has been held that where there is no investigation of a claim which is dismissed for default, a fresh claim may be made (8) The discharge of the order of attachment cannot be properly asked for in such suit The intervenor having established his title by declaratory decree, should then carry the decree to the Court by which the uttachment was issued, when such Court, heing bound to recognize the adjudication, will govern itself accordingly (9) An order is not appealable (10) An order passed by a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court dismissing a claim preferred by mortgagees of immoveable property which was attached in execution, was held subject to appeal under the Letters Patent (11)

In the latter the Court decides nothing as to the existence of the mortgage. The purchaser buys the property with notice of the mortgage, and subject to such risks as the notice might involve (1). A person who purchases a property in execution of his own decree apparently subject to a mortgage hen as declared by the Court under r. 62, without, however, acquiescing in the order made in favour of the mortgage, is entitled to question the mortgage, if done so within a year of the order in the claim ease by way of defence in the suit brought against him by the mortgage to enforce his hen, although he may not have instituted any suit under r. 63 to establish the right which he claims in the property in dispute (3)

Order for sale—This rule corresponds with sect 242 of Art VIII of 1859, but that section provided only for the sale of such attached property as did not consist of money or bank notes. The present wording save the words in italics, was introduced by sect 284 of Act X of 1877. The words in italics we additions made by the present Code. Where the same property is under itachment by two Courts of different grades a sale effected by the Court of lower grade is not a nullity. Sect 63, ante, is a directory section dealing with procedure, and does not take away the jurisdiction to sell conferred on the Court by this rule (3). Sect 89 of the Transfer of Property Act contemplates a cuttain state of things, but where such state does not exist that section does not exclude other ways of enforcing a decree, and a Court has general jurisdiction to direct a sile, if not under that section, then under this ille (1).

"May "—It is, however, imperative on the Court to act when an application is duly made by a party interested and having the right to apply, but when property has been sold in execution of a decree it cannot be sold again at the instance of another decree holder who attuched it prior to the attachment under the decree m'der which it was sold (5)

Sales .- A sale in execution is a sale by the Court which has a statutory power conferred on it of transferring the interest of the judgment debtor to the purchaser, and to that end a certain course of procedure is prescribed terminat mg with the sale certificate (5) As to sales of agricultural produce see rr 74, 75 In order that the sale be good it must have been held under a good decree. (6) and it must have been conducted by a person duly authorized. The words " uhom the Court may appoint in the former section were held to apply not only to the words "any other person, but also to the officers of the Court (7) When a Court postponed a sale, but information not reaching the Nazir in time, he sold the property, it was held that the sale was void (8) In sales under the direction of the Court it is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taut or touch of fraud or deceit or inistepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers (9) Where a sale was conducted by two officers of the Court, one a chief clerk and officiating bailiff and the other, his deputy, being the auctioneer and the purchaser made a bid on the representation of the latter in the presence and hearing of the former that he was selling the land at the instance of the mortgagees, though a proclamation was read in English (which the purchaser did not understand) to the effect that only the interest of the judgment dobtor was being sold, it was held by the Privy Council that as the interest of the judgment debtor was a mere equity to redeem property mortgaged far beyond its value, the Court could not enforce a bargain so illusory against a purchasi misled by its agents. And it was also held that the chief elerk was right in referring the matter to the Court for direction, and also in not proceeding under sect 306 of the last Code (now represented by r 84 of this Order) (1)

66 (1) Where any property is ordered to be sold by public Proclamation of sales auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court

(2) Such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the decree holder and the judgment debtor and shall state the time and place of sale, and specify as fauly and accurately as possible—

(a) the property to be sold,

(b) the revenue assessed upon the estate or part of the estate, where the property to be sold is an interest in an estate or in part of an estate paying revenue to the Government,

(c) any incumbrance to which the property is hable,

(d) the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered, and

(e) every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property

(3) Every application for an order for sale under this rule shall be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the mainer intensibetore prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification, the matters required by sub rule (2) to be specified in the proclamation

(4) For the purpose of ascertaining the matters to be specified in the proclamation, the Court may summon any person whom it thinks necessary to summon and may examine him in respect to any such matters and require him to produce any

details given in this rule, for an omission causing substantial injury may form ground for setting aside the sale under r. 90, post (1). Under r. 69 the Court may adjourn the sale. It is necessary in such case to mention the date and hour of sale (2). If this is done for a longer period than seven days a fresh proclamation (3) must issue unless the judgment-debtor waives it (1). Where there is a series of short postponements less than seven days, which taken together in the aggregate amount to more than seven days, a fresh proclamation is necessary (5). Another date should be fixed. Where a sale did not take place on the day fixed in the original notice, it was held that an indefinite postponement could not be regarded as an adjournment from day to day (6). Proceedings mentioned in this rule have been held to be of an administrative and not judicial character. They are not therefore orders within seet. 17 (formerly 211) or appealable. But it a sale does take place objection may be taken on any of the grounds mentioned in r. 90 (formerly sect. 311), some of which may relate to the contents of the proclamation (7). It has been said that the sales contemplated by the rule are sales in execution of decrees, and the procedure and the rules laid down regarding them are framed on the assumption that the property to be sold his been already attached (1). It has been held therefore that property not attached and not proclaimed cannot be sold, (2) and where plaintiff attached before judgment and the suit was dismissed but decreed in appeal, it was held that a sale without further attachment was void (3). It has, however, also been held that though the absence of attachment is an irregularity, a sale is not to be considered as a nullity increty by reason of the absence of any attachment (4). Publication of a sale proclaimation upon the decree holder's property at a distance of some half-mile from the judgment debtor's property is a material irregularity in the publication of the sale (5). The former section was held to have no application to a case in which property was being sold under a mortgage-decree in which a claimant objected that the property had previously been sold to him at a private sale (6). An order of sale after attachment on a money-decree may create a valid change on the property (7)

"After notice"—The proclamation was in the Mofussil usually prepared without notice to the judgment debtor and behind his back, and he was not therefore likely to receive any intimation of its contents until it was fixed up in the Court house or Collectorate or was published upon the property. The faultiness of this practice was held therefore to excuse objection by the judgment dobtor (8). The Code has therefore been altered to give effect to a practice followed in Calcutta with great advantage of drawing up the proclamation after notice to the parties, who are thus afforded an opportunity of setting the contents correctly, and in a great measure are restrained from subsequently raising obstructive and dilatory objections. If objections are not taken they may be deemed to have been waited (9). The original Bill proceeding on the ground that the object of those proceedings was to give notice to intending purchasers rather rejections of a claim preferred, or an objection under rule 58, opened up the prospect of litigation, the intending purchases should have notice of the matter

"Time and place of sale."—Property cannot he sold before the expry of the period inentioned in r 68. The proclamation should fix a day for the sale which is not a holiday, or a day on which the Courts are closed hy order of the High Court (1). Both the proclamation of the time and place of sale and the holding of such sale at such time and place are conditions proceeding to the sale being a sale under the Code (2). It was held under the last Code that it was intended that a sale of moveable property should ordinarily be held in some place within the jurisdiction of the Court ordering the sale. Good and sufficient reason must be shown for directing otherwise (3)

"The property to be sold."-The judgment debtor has the right to have the property to he sold described with reasonable accuracy (4) As this is to be expressly stated, where the proclamation set out particulars of the property, but subsequent to such preclamation a portion of the property was released to a third party, it was held that a fresh proclamation must be made (5) If a Court directs the sale of property not warranted by the decree, the person aggreeved may follow the property in a regular suit (6) In a recent case where decree-holders had applied for execution by attachment and sale of a certain encumbered share of a makel, which was fully described in the Schedule, and the share was attached and sold, but the Subordinate Judge granted a certificate stating that a different and unencumbered share bad been purchased, it was held by the Priva Council that there was no power to sell the latter share, since this was not a case of a mere misdescription but of a mistake as to identity (7) The sak of a decree partly executed only enables the purchaser to execute what remains to be carried out (8) In the undermentioned case (9) it was held that the sale of a decree for possession of land did not carry the mesne profits to the debtor. An application to set aside a sheriff's sale or for compensation on the ground of deficiency in the area of land sold was refused (10)

this objection should be taken in the first Court when seeking to set aside a sale (1) The words "part of an estate" mean an aliquot part of an estate (2)

"Any incumbrance."—In the case of a mortgage the amount of the mortgage-deht unpaid should be stated (3) An absence of the specification of the incumbrance may amount to a material irregularity avoiding the sale (4) If a decree-holder knowing of the existence of an incumbrance does not notify it, the land passes free from it (5) Semble, a third person purchasing mortga_ed property bona fide at a sale in execution of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor obtains a good title free from the mortgage lien unless the sale is made subject to it (6) Where the holder of two decrees attached property in execution of one of them, he was held to have a right to state in the notification of sale that he likewise claimed the same property in satisfaction of his second decree (7) It was held that claims admitted by the parties or established by decree of Court should be entered in the proclamation as charges upon the property, though they came to the knowledge of the Court in an inquiry under this rule only, and have not been made the subject of an order under sect 282 of the former Code It was also held that mortgages noted in the proclamation as claims upon the property sold, should not necessarily be entered in the certificate of salo, or be computed as part of the purchase money unless they had been admitted by the parties or established by decree, or unless thoy had been declared under that section to be charges on the property, and the Court has seen fit to sell it subject to them, but they should be so entered and computed if they have thus been admitted or established, or if they had been declared under that section and the sale was held subject to them (8)

"Every other thing."—It has been held that the proclamation should specify as fairly and accurately as possible the value of the property, masmuch as it was a material fact for the purchaser to know in judging of the nature and value of the property (9) It was proposed to amend the rule to the effect that no valuation was to be entered in the proclamation But this proposal has not been adopted. If the property of which the sale is sought is a debt. and the Court receives notice from the allered debter that no debt exists the Court should satisfy itself as to the existence or otherwise of the debt, and if it comes to the conclusion that no debt exists should abstain from proceeding to sale (1) Should the Court base reason to believe that the property the sale of which was asked for was held by occupancy tenure, it is its duty to notify that fact in the proclamation as a warning to prospective hidders (2)

"Every application," etc. sub rule (3).—The Code has thus adopted a practice stated to have obtained in the Madras presidency (3) under which the decree holder is required to assist the Court by ascert inning and communic itmg the particulars to be specified in the proclamation of sale

"Shall be made "-See notes to last rule and to r 5, and as to fixing in Court House note (1) The words "as nearly as may be" have been inserted because the provision applies generally to sales of both kinds of property, and in the case of moveables the provisions of r 5 relating to immoveables cannot be applied in their entirety. An omission to carry out the provision of this rule is an irregularity, but does not render a sale void (2)

Advertisement -It is right that the Court should permit any advertise ment reasonably required which might have the effect of giving notice to all possible purchasers (3) The power of advertisement is now still further extended, and an option is given not to publish in the Gazette, which is not commonly read by the classes most affected The costs are as under the last Code costs in the sale (4) A want of correspondence between the advertisement and the schedule of the proclamation is an irregularity which night need to be set right by the Court if the sale was otherwise regular (5)

"Lots."—The substance of the decision (6) on the subject of the division of a joint area into lots has been incorporated. It had been previously held, prior to the amendment of the last Code by sect 29 of Act VII of 1888, that where several separate properties are attached there must be a separate proclamation (7)

68. Save in the ease of property of the kind described in the proviso to rule 43, no sale hereunder shall, Time of sale. without the consent in writing of the judgmentdebtor, take place until after the expiration of at least thirty days in the ease of immoveable property, and of at least fifteen days in the ease of moveable property, calculated from the date on which the copy of the proclamation has been affixed on the court-house of the Judge ordering the sale

"Consent"-An application made on the day of sale by the judgment debtor that a part only of the property should be sold, instead of the entirety, is not a consent under this rule (8)

Sale in contravention of rule -There has been a difference of opinion on the question whether contravention of the provisions of the section (230) which this rule replaces, is an illegality vitiating the sale, (9) or as is the case

(2) Where a sale is adjourned under sub-rule (1) for a longer period than seven days, a fresh proclamation under rule 67 shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor consents to waive it.

Adjournment.—This is a matter of discretion Whether it should be grauted must be determined upon the particular facts, and proceedents (3) are not profitable. The Court must consider not only the interests of the indigment-debtor, but also the possibility of prejudice to the decree holder. When, however, a sale is adjourned, the provisions of the rule should be followed with exactitude (4). See notes to r. 66, ande, "Proclamation." defaulting purchaser under the processors relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money

"Purchaser's default"—Sect 25t of Act VIII of 1859, so far as it relates to the subject matter of the present rule, rin "If the proceeds of the sale which is cientually consummated be less than the price bid by such defaulting purchaser the difference shall be leviable from him under the rules for enforcing the payment of money in satisfication of a decree of Court". The present wording was adopted by sect 230 of Act X of 1877, saw as indicated in italies. Of the alterations so indicated the only important ones are the addition of the words "or to the Collector or subordinate of the Collector, as the case may be, and "or other person" which were inside by the present Code.

The rule applies to re sales in consequence of default in payment of deposit under O XXI r 83, or in payment of purchase mency under O XXI r 83 and O XXI r 86, (1) and under O XXI r 87. (2) and whether the property be moveable or immoveable (3) even when the property is resid forthwith, owing to the judgment creditor repudiating the bid of his sgent, (4) also where the purchaser refuses to pay the purchase money owing to the same property being sold the next day in excention of a decree of another party who had a previous lien on the property, (3) but the re sale must be of the same property as first sold and under the same description and any substantial difference in matters required by O XXI r 66, disentitles the decree holder to recover any deficiency of price (6). It does not apply to a case where the purchaser makes default and a re-sale is ordered but does not take place owing to the property being sold in execution of another decree at the instance of another judgment creditor at a lower price (7)

"Any deficiency of price "-Does not melade interest on the price (8)

Bidding by decree holder. This rule is smular to sect. 201 of Act X of 1877, save that the last clause has been added by Act XIV of 1882, and the wints in italies by the present Gole. Of these, the words "adject to the promuting faction 73" have been substituted for "if he so desires," and the words "adject to treate are affected by "at "intensity in."

"Holder of a decree "—An as a preo of a decree under an oral agreement, the consulcration of which was not paid till after the sale, as not a decree holder and it is unnece ary for him to obtain permission to bal (1)

"Where a decree holder purchases."—He is bound to exercise the most scrupulous furness, if he or his agent discussible others from purchising, or opink dispurates the property (2) it is sufficient ground to set aside the sale (3). The Price Council have held that that is too sweeping in its terms and leave to hid puts him in the same position as any other purchaser (4). It would be different if the dispurating remarks were made by a purchaser who was not the desire holder (5). If the decree he teversed the sales under it to decree holders fall through but not the sales to bom fide purchasers who were not parties (6). A decree holder purchasing with leave to bid and set off must pay the decree holder repirately as the decree he teversed the sales under it to decree holders fall through but not the sales who have to bid and set off in the parties (6) to decree holder purchasing with leave to bid and set off must pay the deposition of the set aside for definit where all parties (nellading the Government as represented by the other or definition of the sales and the deposition (as he should be set as the deposition (as he should be set of the deposition (as he should be set as the deposition (as he should be set as the deposition (as he should be set as the deposition (as he should be set as the sales and the deposition (as he should be set as the sales and the sales are the sales as the sales and the sales are the sales and the sales are the sales as the sales are the sales and the sales are the sales are the sales and the sales are the sales are the sales are the sales are sales are the

"With such permission" - The decree holder is it olately bound to during permission before he can purchase (8). Leave to bid puts the decree holder in the same position is any other purchase (9).

"Be set off" This was not allowed where the provisions of sect 205 of the former Code applied (10) the set off being monaded to prevent trouble and into once the control of the substantial nature of the transaction, (11) and the set off can only be necepted for so much of the judgment debt as the assets applicable to its discharge may suffice to satisfy (12). The purchaser can only be compelled to refund the rateable amount due to the other stacking criditor, either by summary process in execution or by suit, or he may be given the option of electing a re-sale (13). The terms of the present rule make the set off subject to the provisions of sect 73. A mortgaged decree holder, with debtor can satisfy the Court that there is reason to believe that the amount of the decree may be raised by the mortgage or lease or private sale of such property, or some part thereof, or of any other immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, the Court may, on his application, postpone the sale of the property comprised in the order for sale on such terms and for such period as it thinks proper, to enable him to raise the amount.

(2) In such ease the Court shall grant a certificate to the judgment-dehtor authorizing him within a period to he mentioned therem, and notwithstanding anything contained in section 64, to make the proposed mortgage, lease or sale :

Provided that all mouses payable under such mortgage, lease or sale shall be paid, not to the judgment-debtor, but, saic in so far as a decree-holder is entitled to set off such money under the provisions of rule 72, into Court:

Provided also that no mortgage, lease or sale under this rule shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court. (3) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to apply to a sale of property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage of, or charge on, such property.

Postponement of sale.- I ue first clause of this rule corresponds with part of sect 243 of Act VIII of 1859 The rest, save the last proviso in the second clause, and the portions in italies, was added by sect 305 of Act X of 1877 That Act also appended a clause . " When such certificate has been granted and so long as it remains in force the provisions of section 248 shall not apply " This was repealed by Act XIV of 1882, which added the last proviso in the second clause, and also added the words, "and notwithstanding anything contained in sect 276 [sect 64]" to the second clause The words in italies have been added by the present Code The Bombay High Court held that the corresponding section to this rule applied to a mortgage decree, declaring that certain properties be sold in satisfaction of the mortgage debt , (1) but the Calcutta High Court held otherwise; (2) and by notification such section was made applicable to proceedings after decree in mortgage suits, but now the third clause of the rule distinctly excludes such proceedings, so far as Bengal and Assam were concerned (3) The rule does not apply to suits for rent in Bengal (4)

"Sale of immoveable property."—This was held to include all sales of immoveable property, the decision being given in reference to a decree on most gage, (1) but property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge is now excluded by the third clause of the present rule.

"The amount of the decree"—That is, the whole amount due on the decree No mortgage will be sanctioned, or certificate granted, or the mortgage confirmed, unless the decree can be fully paid off (2)

"The Court may postpone the sale "-This is an enabling rule, and qualifies the prohibitions contained in sect 64. On compliance with the con ditions of this rule a private alienation, notwithstanding sect 64, becomes absolute, even against all claims enforceable under the attachment (3) Post ponement is discretionary with the Court (4) It should exercise its discretion, and if it finds that a fair case has been made out, it should postpone the sale, (5) but the judgment debtor must most distinctly show that the money due can be well raised in some way other than by immediate sale, and that the ereditor will not be put to loss, (6) and that the debt will be paid off in a reasonable time, (7) twenty years, (7) two or three years, (8) and even one year are un icasonable, (9) but six months has been considered reasonable (7) Where, however, the property has been put up to auction in execution and bids have been made, the Court cannot postpone the sale merely on the representation of a judgment debtor that he can obtain a higher price by private transfer, there being no reasonable ground to believe that the judgment debt would be realized thereby (10)

"Authorizing him"—The authority is only to the judgment debtor to whom it is granted, and the sale in pursuance thereof does not affect the share of another judgment debtor (11) Where the defendant is the guardian of a minor under the Guardian and Wards Act of 1890, the authority under this rule will not give him power to mortgage unless he also gets the permission of the Court which appointed him guardian (12) The Court cannot itself give a lease or mortgage. It can only giant the debtor time to do so himself (13) The rule is enabling, and qualifies the provision contained in sect 64. On compliance with the conditions of the rule, a private alienation, notwithstanding sect. 64, becomes absolute, even against all claims enforceable under the attachment (1)

Deposit by purchaser and re sale on default declared to be the purchaser shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of the officer or other person conducting the sale, and, in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be re-sold.

(2) Where the decree-holder is the purchaser and is entitled to set off the purchase-money under rule 72, the Court may dispense with the requirements of this rule.

"Deposit."—The officer conducting the sale cannot mist upon a deposit being made before acceptance of a bilding, but if it appears that persons without means have been put forward to make sham bildings, and fraudulently frustrate the sale, he would be justified in inquiring into the frustworthiness of the hidder before accepting his bid (3). A decree-holder of the party to whom the lot is knocked down is equally bound to make the prescribed deposit as any other auction-purchaser (4). But where all parties interested waived their right to a deposit, it was held the sale should not be set aside (6). A relaxation of the rule is now made in the case mentioned in the second sub-rule. If there is any dispute as to whether the deposit was offered or not it should be decided by the Judge before commencing a second sale (6). There has been a conflict of opinion whether, if the deposit is not made as required, the sale is no sale at all, (7) or whether this circumstance is an irregulantly only (8). The first opinion is no longer law (9). But it has been recently held that if the balance of purchase-money is not piid, there is no sile under the Code (1). The more making of the last bid does not conclude the sale, for the conclusion of a sale it is necessary for the sale officer to accept the final bid and to make a declaration who is the purchaser and to order him to pay him the deposit under this rule (2)

"Default"—The sale is to be held "forthwith,' so a fresh proclamation of situment of the hour of sale is not necessary (3). The sale is not to be adjourned. The putting up of the property again, and soliciting fresh bids is a continuation of the original sale a part and parcel of the proceedings which had their origin in the first putting up of the property, and which do not come to an end until the property has been knocked down to a purchaser, and that purchaser has made the statutory deposit (4). An officer conducting a second sale is not bound to commence from the next highest bidded had that made by the defaulter. He may do so if the next highest bidder is willing to abide by his bid otherwise he should commence the sale de nevo (5).

Loss on re-sale —Under r 71 a defaulting purchaser is inswarable for loss by 10 and . It has been held that the corresponding section in the last Code upplied to 10 and shere dealt with and that the first purchaser could be compelled to pay the difference between the first and the second sales (6)

85 The full amount of purchase money payable shall be time for payment in maid by the purchaser into Court before the court closes on the fifteenth day from the sale of the property

Provided that, in calculating the amount to be so paid into Court, the purchaser shall have the advantage of any set off to which he may be entitled under rule 72

Date of payment.—Sect 307 of the last Code, which the rule replaces, rule before the Court closes on the fitteenth day after the sale of the property exclusive of such day, (2) or f the fifteenth day to a Sunday or dute holiday, then on the first office day after the fifteenth day." Instead of the words "after" and "credusic of such day," the present rule uses the word "from," which will have the same effect. The provisions relative to the occurrence of a Sunday have been omitted because the matter is sufficiently covered by sect 10 of the General Clauses Act of 1897. In these two respects, therefore, the former section and the present rule are the same. Under the last Code, however, it was held that days (as during the vacation) when the Court was closed but the office was open were not holidays within the meaning of the former section (3). The practice of the Original Side of the High Court is that payment of interest follows as a matter of course, when the purchaser of property at a Registrar's sale is out of time in paying into Court the balance of his purchase mony (4).

86. In default of payment within the period meutioned is procedure in default of in the last preceding rule, the deposit may, payment of the Court thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be re-sold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all elaim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold

Default —This rule corresponds with a portion of sect 254 of Act VIII of 1859 and with sect 308 of Acts X of 1877 and XIV of 1882, save that the words in italics have been substituted for the word "shall" appearing in the earlier Codes The former section has been applied to proceedings in execution under a mortgage decree in Bengal and Assam (5)

"In default of payment."—Under the rules of the Madras High Court payment into the Government Treasury is sufficient payment, (6) likewise, it is a sufficient compliance with the decree, if the judgment debtor bring the mone into Court within the specified time and diligently take the necessary steps required by departmental rules for the actual payment into the Treasury (7)

"Be forfeited to Government"—This is imposed in order to prevent waste of the Court's time in conducting re-sales. The fact that the decree holder and the judgment debtor do not ask for a re-sale was held to be no reason why Government should forego the forfeiture, (1) but the wording of the Code was then imperative, "shall be forfeited". The modification introduced by the present Code makes it discretionary with the Court to direct the forfeiture or not, and has been inserted to prevent hardship caused in such cases as the last mentioned (2)

Appeal.—An appeal under the last Code lay from an order under the corresponding section where the defaulting purchaser attached the decree in execution of which the property was sold to him, and a petition for revision was held not to be maintainable (3) According to this decision an appeal lies under sect 47, ante

Notification on re-sale, payment of the purchase-money within the period allowed for such payment, shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation in the manner and for the period hereinbefore prescribed for the sale.

"Fresh proclamation"—This rule is sect 309 of the last Code A fresh notification is not prescribed in the case of every re sale, but only when the re sale is in default of pryment of the purchase money within the time allowed for such payment (4) The rule does not apply to a postponed sale (5) or to a case in which the property is put up again and sold forthwith under r 84, ante (6)

Bidding by co sharer—Ihis rule modifies the terms of sect 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, which provided that where "a share of a putticidarce estab proping recenue to government" was sold, "if the lot shall have been knocked down to a stranger, any co sharer other than the judgment debtor, or any other member of the co parcewary, may claim to take the share sold at the sum at which the lot was knocked down. Provided that the claim be made on the day of sale and that the claimant fulfil all the conditions of the sale." "Co sharer "-An officer conducting a sale of land which was a share of a nutteedarce estate had to take notice of a claim made by a person under sect 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 and to receive the purchase money as a fulfilment of the conditions of sale, subject to any question which might be raised by any party interested as to the claimant's title (3) If his right were clear the sale might be confirmed in his favour, if doubtful, the sale might be confirmed in fayour of the other hidder, leaving the co sharer to his remedy by suit, (3) he ought not to have been substituted for the actual purchaser His position was that he could advance his claim to pre emption, which would be adjudicated on later (4) Under that Act a co sharer having preferred his claim to pre emption, the sale could not be held as void merely by the failure of the person to whom the property was knocked down to make the deposit (5) The right of pre emption can only he claimed by those who are co sharers or memhers of the copercenary at the time the auction sale takes place (6) A title which is still defeasible at the date of the sale is not sufficient to support a claim under this rule (7) A decree holder, who under Mahomedan law would be entitled to pre emption, is not entitled to that right on sale in execution of his decree (8) Where the judgment debtor's rights in a puttecdarce estate were sold and purchased hy his son in the name of his father in law, who was not a co sharer and who after the sale waved his rights in favour of the judgment debtor, held that a co sherer who had fulfilled requirements was cutifled to pre emption (9) A suit by a person claiming pre emption for possession is premature and unmaintainable He should sue to set aside the order confirming the sale in favour of the auction purchaser and to have hunself declared cutifled to pre emption and to be sub stituted for the auction purchaser (10) Where a revenue sale has been caused by the default of a co-sharer and the property is purchased at that sale by him, there may he such relations between him and his co sharer as would justify the Court in treating such sale as for the benefit of both (11)

It also confers a right upon certain persons other than the judgment debtor. See post, note, "Who may apply." It was not even every judgment-debtor who could apply, but only those whose property had heen sold under the Code (8). It was held that a simple mortgages of a tenure on holding sold for arrears of rent, such sale being with right to purchaser to a out incumbrances, could apply, (9) but not a second mortgages not a party to the suit whose interest had not passed under the sale (10). The deposit under this rule must be made within thirty days from the date of the sale But it is not necessary that the notice under r 92 should be made within that time (8)

"For payment to the purchaser."-It has been said that 5 per cent is given partly as a solatium to the purchaser for the loss of his hargain (9) It inakes no difference that the purchaser is also the decree holder (10)

"For payment to the decree holder "-These words mesu that the decree holder is the person solely entitled to the money paid into Court (11) Sect 295 (now 73) does not apply to a deposit made by a judgment debtor under this rule (12) It was also, therefore, held that it was sufficient to deposit only the amount of the decree for the satisfaction of which the sale was proclaimed and took place (13) In this rule the term decree holder means only the person for satisfaction of whose decree the sale has been ordered, and does not include other persons who would have a right to claim rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under sect 73 (14)

of sale as that for the recovery of which the sole was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decreeholder."

It has been held that the word "received" ought to be construed to mean sums of money either actually received by the decree holder, or which he was in a position to credit to his account, and that this was not the case as regards amounts deposited by other purchasers (1) It has been held also that the payment to the decree holder need not be in eash, and that it is enough if he is satisfied with regard to the whole of the amount due to him (2). The Bonnhay High Court held that what the former section contemplated was an actual receipt by the decree holder, and that nothing else would satisfy its require ments (3).

"Or prosecute "-The addition of the words "or prosecute" was intended to give effect to the undermentioned ruling (4)

Impleading parties—It was proposed, morder to give effect to two rulings of the Allahabad High Court (5) in applications under the following rule, to emact a clause declaring that an applicant under this rule should be bound to implead the purchaser and decree holder as parties to the application which should in their absence be disamssed. It had been also held in the Calcuta High Court that an auction purchaser is entitled to notice before an order is made under this section (6). The proposed clause has not been enacted.

"Unless he withdraws"—This rule prevents a person who has preferred an application under r 90 from making or prosecuting an application under this rule, until he has withdrawn the other, but the converse is not provided for (7) This rule and r 90 permit of applications hy persons who could not have applied under sects 310 and 311 of the last Code

Appeal—Sect 588 of the Code of 1882 did not provide for an appeal against an order under sect 310a corresponding with this rule (8). It was, however, held that if and when un order under that section fell under sect 214 (9) (now 17) it was appealable,(9) and where it did not fall within that section, as in the case of an auction-purchaser stranger, the order was subject to revision (1). It was held that no appeal lay from an order refusing to restore to the file an application dismissed for default of appearance (2). And it has been recently held that an order on an application to set saide a sale under this rule is not a decree within the meaning of sect 2 (3). The true nature of the order must be examined and the character of the parties affected by it must be ascertained before it can be determined whether the order falls within the scope of sect 47 (4)

Application to set aside sale on ground of irregularity or fraud person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of a seets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it.

Provided that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by

"May apply"—An application under this rule is limited to the grounds set forth in it, and a Court cannot set aside a sale under this rule upon grounds which have not been pleaded by the applicant (5). The former section, according to a Tull Bench of the Madras High Court, applied to sales of mortgaged property in execution of mortgage dicrees (6). It was held that there was no provision in Act X of 1859 entitling a party to have a sale set aside on the ground of non attachment and non proof of publication of sale proclamation (7). Appainently, the application should be made to the Court executing the decree.

that where execution of the decree had been transferred to the Collector, application had to be made to him, (1) but that decision had reference to the Rules of the NWP and was not followed in Bombay (2). A beneficial owner is not a necessary party to a proceeding for setting aside an execution rule. It is competent to the Court to be traide the sale finally and conclusively as against the beneficial owner, although his benam der only and not be is made a party to the proceeding (3). be set aside, while in the cases to which the rule does apply the sale is merely voidable at the instance of the party affected thereby, and, therefore, can be set aside A plea, therefore, to the jurisdiction of the executing Court is not admissible on an application under this rule (1) The rule is thus confined to irregularities in the particular incidents of execution following a valid decree, which are men tioned in it Where the whole suit is attacked another suit is maintainable, notwithstanding unsuccessful applications under O IX r 13 (formerly sect 108) and this rule, and omission to appeal against orders on such applications, for the existence of a real suit is assumed (2) A Court, however, may, to use the language of sect 115 (formerly 622), act illegally, or with material irregularity, in the exercise of a jurisdiction which it does possess. The present rule refers in express terms to irregularity only It has, however, been said (3) that though the term "illegality" does not include "irregularity," the latter word as used in this section is wide enough to include illegality. The question is not one of importance unless the illegality is held to be of such a character as to affect the validity of a sale in a manner making it absolutely void. This has been held to be the result in the case of cortain illegalities (4) The view taken in some of these cases that the act or omission was an illegality vitinting the sale was dis sented from in others. In certain cases there was probably nothing more than an irregularity It is clear that where a party professes to apply under this rule. then by such application he admits that the case must be treated as one of material irregularity to be redressed pursuant to its provisions only upon proof of injury (1) Ordinarily at least such irregularity will make the sale voidable only Assuming, however, that there may be an illegality, which apso facto renders the sale void, then it must be held either that the rule covers such a case, in which event injury must be established, or the ease is one without the rule. In the latter case it has been held that the Court has apart from the former section, an inherent right to set aside all illegal proceedings provided that the interests of third parties are not affected (2) or it might have refused to confirm a sale on grounds other than those on which a party may apply to set it aside under this rule (3) The case being ex hypothesi outside the section it has been held that no proof of injury is necessary (4) The tendency, however, of modern decisions is to check judgments holding sales to be nullities on account of what are really mere irregularities in procedure (5) And unless it can be established that the sale is for want of jurisdiction or other cause absolutely void, the case will, when there is an irregularity of the kind described fall within and he subject to the provisions of the rule

As the former section was confined to cases of mere irregularity of the nature described, it did not apply where the sale was sought to be set aside on another ground such as fraud (6) Where, however, fraud in the oxecution proceedings was alleged and attempted to be substantiated and the question arose between parties (7) an application lay under sect 47 (formerly 244) and evidence,(1) and that that evidence must be direct (2) and that a Court could not without evidence, and upon a mere supposition, find that an irregularity did cause an injury by causing an inadequate price to be hid at the sale amount or nature of the evidence required in any case depended upon its own circumstances (3) Difficulty was felt as to what was meant hy "direct" evidence Sometimes it was considered that this meant that persons should he called to testify that had it not been for a particular set of circumstances they would have done so and so, would have given a greater price, that they were willing to bid hut were deterred and misled, and so forth. In other cases it was considered sufficient that there should be evidence of circumstances which would warrant the necessary, or at least the reasonable, inference that the sale was the result of the irregularity complained of (4) The Select Com mittee stated that the language of the rule has been altered in order to meet the doubts raised as to the evidence upon which the Court can act, and they refer to the Privy Council decision Tasadduk Rasul Khan v Ahmad Husain Apparently it is intended to affirm that ruling, but the difficulty hitherto has been as to its construction Proof, of course, will be required, and this proof may, it is submitted, on a true construction of the Privy Council decisions consist of "direct" evidence in the narrow sense stated, or of evidence of facts which warrant an inference that the irregularity was the cause of the inadequate It has been held that where the property is sold at an inadequate price owing to irregularities in the conduct and publication of the sale there is substantial injury within the meaning of this rule (5)

interest the sale should not be set aside (1) The second paragraph of sect 313 of the last Code, which this rule replaces, has been transposed to the next rule

"No saleable interest "-The words "no saleable interest" have been said to refer to cases where a purchaser buys a property which turns out to have no existence at all or to be of no saleable value whatever (2) It may be questioned whether the substitution here of the word "value" for interest The words mean "nothing to sell," and are not intended to confine the cases in which the application may be made to those in which the judgmentdebtor though baying an interest such interest is by probibition of law or otherwise unsalcable (3) After a vesting order the debtor has no interest (4) The rule does not apply where the judgment dehtor has no saleable interest in a portion only of the property, (5) nor is the fact that the property is subject to a mortgage sufficient to support an application, (6) or the fact that one of two judgment debtors has no interest if the other debtor owns the entire interest (7) Although default has been made in the payment of revenue, ownership of the property continues in the defaulter until a revenue sale takes place A purchaser, therefore, of an estate in execution of a decree, after default has been made in paying revenue for it, cannot, in the event of a subsequent revenue sale, seek to set asido the sale under which he had made the purchase on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest (8) See also notes to 1 93, post Under the Code of 1859 a sale under a second attachment was valid and would provail over a sale subsequently held under a prior attachment and passed all the interest of the judgment debtor (9) Now bowever, when property is sold in execution it cannot be sold again, and when a judicial sale takes place all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground (10)

(1) Where no application is made under rule 89, rule [ss, 3 90 of rule '11, or where such application is Sale when to become absolute or be set aside made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute

evidence,(1) and that that evidence must be direct,(2) and that a Court could not without evidence, and upon a more supposition, find that an irregularity did cause an injury hy causing an inadequate price to he bid at the sale. The amount or nature of the evidence required in any case depended upon its own circumstances (3) Difficulty was felt as to what was meant by "direct" evidence Sometimes it was considered that this meant that persons should he called to testify that had it not been for a particular set of circumstances they would have done so and so, would have given a greater price, that they were willing to bid but were deterred and misled, and so forth. In other cases it was considered sufficient that there should be evidence of circumstances which would warrant the necessary, or at least the reasonable, inference that the sale was the result of the irregularity complained of (4) The Select Com mittee stated that the language of the rule has been altered in order to meet the doubts raised as to the evidence upon which the Court can act, and they refer to the Privy Council decision, Tasadduk Rasul Khan v Ahmad Husain Apparently it is intended to affirm that ruling, but the difficulty hitherto has been as to its construction Proof, of course, will be required, and this proof may, it is submitted, on a true construction of the Privy Council decisions consist of "direct" evidence in the narrow sense stated, or of evidence of facts which warrant an inference that the irregularity was the cause of the inadequate It has been held that where the property is sold at an inadequate price owing to irregularities in the conduct and publication of the sale there is sub stantial injury within the meaning of this rule (5)

Appeal —An order dismissing an application under this rule on the ground of the non appearance of the applicant is appealable (6). If a judgment debter has made in application under this rule, he can (if he withdraws it) apply under sect 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (7).

91. The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decret happlication by pur chaser to set aside sale may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Application by an auction purchaser—The rule is limited to the crestated. Therefore a purchaser cannot apply to set aside a side on the ground of deficiency in area in the land sold, (8) or of insrepresentation or concealment in the ale notification inducing purchase at a price more than the property is really worth (9). If the purchaser knew that the debtor had no salable

"No saleable interest."-The words "no saleable interest" have been said to refer to eases where a purchaser buys a property which turns out to have no existence at all or to be of no saleable value whatever (2) It may be questioned whether the substitution here of the word "value" for interest is correct The words mean "nothing to sell," and are not intended to confine the cases in which the application may be made to those in which the judgmentdebtor though having an interest such interest is by prohibition of law or other wise unsaleable (3) After a vesting order the debtor has no interest (4) The rule does not apply where the judgment debtor has no saleable juterest in a portion only of the property, (5) nor is the fact that the property is subject to a mortgage sufficient to support an application,(6) or the fact that oue of two judgment debtors has no interest if the other debtor owns the entire interest (7) Although default has been made in the payment of revenue, ownership of the property continues in the defaulter until a revenue sale takes place A purchaser. therefore, of an estate in execution of a decree, after default has been made in paying revenue for it, cannot, in the event of a subsequent revenue sale seck to set aside the sale under which be had made the purchase on the ground that the judgment debtor bad no saleable interest (8) See also notes to r 93 post Under the Code of 1859 a sale under a second attachment was valid and would proval over a sale subsequently held under a prior attachment and passed all the interest of the judgment debtor (9) Now however, when property is sold in execution it cannot be sold again, and when a judicial sile takes place all previous attachments effected upon the projects sold fall to the ground (10)

which a sale has taken place has itself been set aside is not sufficient (1). Nor where a stranger to the proceedings purchases property bona fide, can the sale to him be set aside on the ground that the decree had already been satisfied out of Court at the time the sale was held (2) Nor is there a distinction between sales in execution of money and mortgage decrees (3) Where there is fraud on the part of the plaintiff, the validity of the sale is not affected, if the purchaser is not implicated in the fraud, (4) aliter where the purchaser is so implicated (5) The reason for this rule is that a purchaser is not bound to inquire into the correct ness of the order for execution or of the judgment on which it issues If he were, there would be little inducement to buy (6) There is, however, a distinction between decree holders who purchase under their own decree which is after wards reversed, and bona fide purchasers at a sale in execution of a valid decree to which they were no parties As regards the latter the rule is as just stated but a judgment creditor who is also a purchaser, purchases subject to the result of the litigati time he purel to all persons affected (1) In the event of the death of the judgment debtor application must be on notice to his representative (2) It is not necessary that the notice under this rule should be given within thirty days of the date of the sale (3)

Sub rulo (3).—This clause in the last Code ran "no suit to set aside, on the ground of such irregularity, an order passed under this section shall be brought by the party against whom such order has been made." The words "on the ground of such irregularity" are omitted, as the rule applies to all the three pieceding rules. If an application has been made and disallowed under this rule the order subject to appeal under O XLIII is 13 is final, and cannot be the subject of a suit.

The preceding law may be summarized as follows — A sale of land being a proceeding in execution, a question which arose as to the setting aside of such a sale was a question relating to execution, which, if it arose between the presons mentioned in sect 211 (now sect 17), had to be determined by order of the Court executing the deeree, and not by a separate suit (4) As to the procedure to be followed in such cases in execution, that depended upon the grounds which were put forward to impeach the sale. If the sale was impugued on the ground of irregularity (5) then the degree holder, judgment dobtor or other person whose property was affected by the sale applied under sect 311 (now r 20). If the sale was sought to be set aside for any other cause than irregularity, such as fraud (6) or want of jurisht tion (7) in the executing Court (8)

If, as he should be, the auction-purch is r is made a party to the proceedings he can appeal if the sile is set aside (1). Where a sile is sought to be set aside on some ground other than those meutioned in these rules, and the matter is dealt with under sect. 47 (as in the case of fraud (2)), the order under that section is a decree and appealable as such, and a second appeal his (3). An objection cannot be allowed for the first time in appeal (4). Where a Court wrongfully sets aside or refuses to set aside a sale its order may, if the circumstances fall within the terms of sect. 115, he the subject of revision (5).

Return of purchases under rule 72, the purchaser shall be entitled the money in certain cases to an order for repayment of his purchase-elaw innoney, with or without interest as the Court may direct, against any person to whom it has been paid.

"Where a sale."—The corresponding section in the last Code was "when a sale of mimo ealide property is set aside under sects 312 or 313, or men it is found that the judgment dehter had no saleable interest, etc, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it" (6) The auction purchaser under the last Code might have applied under sect 313 (now r 91), and the Court might have set aside the sale under the same section (see now r 92), adjudenting upon the question raised, viz, the absence of all saleable interest. The section was enabling and not prohibitive of an independent action (7) Such an application might not, however, he made, and it might yet become known and found (8) either by the Court of execution (9) or in another aut (10) that the property did not belong to the judgment debtor. In this case also the purchaser was upon the fact being found entitled to recover hack his purchase money. It was held that the words in sect 315 of the last Code "when it is found," etc., must be taken in connection with a finding in a separate suit to mean "when it is found in some proceeding by which the judgment creditor is bound". For to compel the judgment creditor to refund merely because in some proceeding between other parties a Court had decided that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest would be contrary to principles of justice (1). The finding must have been in some proceedings to which a judgment creditor was a party or at any rate of which he had notice (2). It is to be observed that the present rule omits "where it is found," etc., as also the last paragraph of the former section. Nothing has been said as to the reason for the first omission, but as regards the second the Committee stated that they added words at the commencement of the rule, "in substitution of the last paragraph of the section which thus becomes unnecessary." Presumbly this observation refers to the italicized words "an order for repajment". Such an other being due for money may be enforced in execution under the rules providing for the execution of decrees and orders for money.

As regards absence of saleable interest in private sales there is under sect 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a coutract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor. In the case of execution sales there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court. The purchaser huys the property with all risks and defects in the judgment debtor's title. In the absence of fraud his only remedy is to apply to set aside the sale und to recover back his purchase money when the judgment debtor had no sale tible interest at all. He cannot obtain a refund in proportion to the extent to which the judgment debtor had no interest (3). The right of the purchaser is absolute even though he himself caused the property to be put up for sale, provided that he was not guilty of fraud or misrepresentation or did not guarantee the validity of the sale (4). See notes to r. 91, and

"Is set aside "-See notes to preceding sections

"The purchaser shall be entitled"—When a sale is set aside the purchaser's right to recover the purchase money is not limited to an application under this rule to the Court executing the decree, but he may bring a suit for the purpose (5) He may sue to cancel the sale, (6) to establish his claim to the land where possession has not been obtained (1) and to recover the purchase money (2) I person was not a party precluded from sung because an order under sect 313 of the last Code was refused where, subsequent to such refusal it appeared that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest (3) If the judg ment debtor has any saleable interest in the property, the Court has no juris diction to order a refuud, and an order made can be set aside on revision (4) The former section was held to empower the auction purchaser to require repay ment of the purchase money but did not impose upon the decree holder the duty of tendering the money as soon as the sale was set aside. He was bound to pay the purchase money only if called upon to do so but not otherwise, and until be was so compelled to refund the purchase money he had no right to call upon the judgment debtor to pay his debt a second time (a) In a recent case under seet 315 of the last Code at was held that an auction purchaser seeking to recover the nurchase money on the ground that he has been deprived of the property owing to the failure of the dehtor's title bad no remedy outside the provisions of the Code and the remedy given is not a suit for money had and received under Art 62 of Schedule I of the I mutation Act of 1908 but is a suit within Art 120 of that Act (6)

"Interest "—Thus the Court may refuse interest (7) as when a person claims more than he is found entitled to (8) or if it is proved that the purchaser has contributed to the loss he has sustained (9). He should not however be charged with the expenses of the sale (10). Where a sale has been set aside the purchaser has been allowed the money laid out by him for the benefit of the property accounting for the rent and profits (11).

94 Where a sale of immoveable property has become to cartificate to purabolite the Court shall grant a certificate specifying the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser Such certificate shall bear date the day on which the sale became absolute

Stamp Registration -Under sect 35 of the Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899) a sale certificate cannot be registered unless it has been duly stamped The sale certificate should not be granted until the anction purchaser has furnished the requisite stamp paper for its engrossment. Attention is directed to the circumstance, which is often overlooked, that the stamp duty is payable, not by the deposit of the sum required to purebase stamps, but hy the stamps them selves (6) Under the provisions contained in the second paragraph of sect 89 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), a copy of the certificate is to be sent hy the Court to the Registering Officer Although sects 17, 32 58, 61 and 89 of that Act except sale certificates from the ordinary procedure in Registration it was said in the Notes accompanying the first draft of the Bill that, "They leave it doubtful whether the action of the Court does or does not complete the registration of the certificate. The procedure laid down in the case of sale certificates would seem sufficiently to meet the requirements contemplated by registration" It was accordingly proposed in the first draft to declare by an addition to sect 89 of the Registration Act on the lines of sect 81 of that exact ment, that the "filing of such copy or copies shall have the same force and effect as registration" But this proposal bas not been adopted (7) The stump is required for the sale o reincate itself. The Court does not require an application for a certificate in writing and if in writing it need not be stamped (8) question of law and fact depending on the questions what could be sold and what was in fact sold. To ascertom this the decree and the whole execution proceedings must be looked at. The question what legally passed by a sale cannot depend oltogether upon the form of the sale certificate (1) See the notes to sect. 63, onle, where this matter is more fully considered, (2) os also the question whether any title to the thing sold is warronted Sect 316 of the last Code dealt with the date of the vesting of the title, a matter which is now governed by sect. 65, to which refer. This provision replaces that in the old Code, that the title should not from the date of the certificate.

95. Where the immoreable property sold is in the occu- is nelitery of property to occupancy of ludgment-debtor or of some person on his hebalf or of some person claim-debtor. In gunder a title created by the judgment-debtor suhsequently to the attachment of such property and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made hy putting such purchaser, or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his hehalf in possession of the property, and, if need he, hy removing any person who refuses to vacate the same.

Delivery of possession.—This rule corresponds with sect 263 of Act VIII of 1859 The words "and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under sect 316," and "on application by the purchaser," were added by sect 318 of Act X of 1877 The present Code altered "sect 316" to "rule 94" and made the additions noted in italies, the words "the application of the purchaser" being substituted for "application by the purchaser". As to trespass on land of which octual possessiou has been given to the purchaser under this rule, see case cited (3)

"Subsequently to the attachment."—A purchaser cannot get summary possession under this rule from the lessee pendente lite of the judgment debtor and must bring a suit for possession (descriptions).

"On the application of the purchaser."—A judgment debtor in spite of confirmation of sale may oppose an application for possession on the ground that the sale was illegal, his occupancy holding not heing transferable by

Putting the purchaser in possession.—A purchaser can obtain that possession although in the first instance he obtained possession under r 96, (4) and a plaintiff obtaining symbolical possession can maintain a fresh suit for real possession, (5) so can the assigned of the purchaser whose possession has been resisted by the judgment debtor, (6) as also a purchaser whether legal delivery has been given or not, (7) hut he must have endeavoured to get posses sion under this rule first (8) By a later decision it was held a suit was maintain able even if he had not applied for possession under this rule, the remedies by suit and under this rule being concurrent (9) Possession being given fifteen years after the sale does not entitle the judgment-debtor to recover possession by suit unless he shows twelve years' possession before he was dispossessed (10)

Limitation.—An application for possession must be within three years of the grant of the sale certificate under Art 178 of Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act),(11) even where the assignee of the purchaser applies, (12) the date being reckoned from when the certificate has been granted, that is, when it has been issued to him (13) The Madras High Court, however, held that in respect of a suit for possession the date from which time begins to run is that of the sale, and the Article applicable being 138 (14) This rule now expressly provides that in respect of an application for possession the three years run from the date of the certificate A purchaser may sue for possession within twelve years of symbolical possession being given him (15) Symbolical possession as ignist

the grantors of a perpetual lease will not be effective against the lessee, so as to save limitation on a suit for possession (1). The Allahabad Court have however, held that a purchaser cannot bring /s suit for possession, even if his application for possession under this rule is barred, as the matter comes under sect 47 (2). In another case the same Court has held that the fact that an application under this rule has been rejected as being made beyond time is no har to a suit by the auction purchaser for the property purchased (3). And there are other decisions holding that sect. 47 is manufacible (1)

Appeal —An appeal was held to be from an order rejecting the application of the purchaser, who was the decree holder, the order being appealable as one under sect 241 (now 47) for possession (5) But the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held otherwise, sect 244 of the last Code not being applicable, (6) but where the application for possession was resisted by the legal representative of the judgment debtor on the allegation that portions of the property belonged to him and not to the judgment debtor, the Calcutta High Court held the application to be one within that section and therefore appealable (7)

96 Where the property sold is in the occupancy of a tenant to necessary of tenant and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by affixing a copy of the certificate of sale in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, that the interest of the judgment debtor has been transferred to the purchaser

Delivery of possession—This rule corresponds with sect 261 of Act VIII of 1859, with the exception of the words "and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under sect 316 'which were added by sect 319 of Act X of 1877, and the words in italies by the present Code which also altered 'sect 316 into "rule 94. This rule does not prevent the purchaser obtaining possession if he can, without the intervention of the Court (8).

"Order delivery "-The Courts in this country do not give possession by removing the possession of one who is in possession under an apparent bon: fide title If the debtor can assert his title in possession by suit only the pur chaser can have no higher claim (2) Formal possession under O XXI r 36 given by a Court in execution operates as between the parties in point of law and fact, as a complete transfer of actual possession from one party to another, (3) and where land which had been given by a father to his son a minor was subsequently attached and sold in execution of a decree against the father, formal possession under this rule to the purchaser completely dispossessed the father, whether he held on his own account or that of his son . (4) but such possession will not take effect as actual possession as against persons who are not parties to the suit (5) nor against a purchaser, in execution of the rights of the judgment debtor, who had previously obtained actual possession (6) The delivery of possession to the purchaser under this rule does not cause dispossession of a person not the judgment debtor, found in possession by receipt of rent from tenants so as to entitle the latter to complain under O XXI r 99 (7) Symbolical possession as against the grantors of a perpetual lease without reservation to the granters and with no rights reserved and only a nominal rent, will not be effective against the lessee to save limitation against a plea of adverse possession (8) The rightful owner dispossessing the other is not a trespasser, and may rely for the support of his possession on the title vested in him (9) Au order under this rule can only be made by the presiding officer of the Court and is a judicial Act (10)

It has been held that if the purchaser be disposeesed by a third party sub equent to formal possession he has twelve years from disposeesion to bring a suit, (3) while, if the judgment debtor be in possession and formal possession be given un for this rule instead of inder 195, a suit for possession against him hes within twelve years of the date of formal possession (1) as formal possession under either r. 95 or this rule formal possession (1) as formal possession under either r. 95 or this rule formal possession be obtained or not (6). But a l'ull Bench of the Bombay High Court has recently held that a mere formal possession of immoveable property by a purchaser at a Court sale cannot prevent limitation running in favour of the judgment-debtor where the latter remains in actual possession, for symbolical possession is neither real possession nor equivalent to it under this Code except where the Code expressly or by implication so provides (7).

The words "without prejudice to any proceedings," etc in the former sect 330, have been omitted, though presumably the law remains the same in this respect

Object of rule - The object of the corresponding and similar provisions in the last Code was, so far as possible, to prevent the originating of a succession of suits It was desired that a light should be determined finally in continuation of an original proceeding and not by fresh proceedings (2) This section, as the last, was limited to application by the decree holder, (3) but now includes orders made on the application of a purchaser against a person other than the judgment debtor (1) A person in whose favour an order under sect 330 had been made could not claim the benefit of the former section (5) As to the amendments, oide post judgment d hter requiring the decree against them to be reopened could be adjudicated upon. The issues which projectly arose in an inquiry were whether the person obstructing was in possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment dehtor (1). The word "possession" was not himited to actual physical possession, but included also constructive, such as hy a tenant (2). The issue which arose was one between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant, that is, a person other than the judgment-dehtor.

Under the Code of 1577 the claim had to be investigated as if a suit had been instituted under sect 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The powers of the Court were thus strictly limited to an inquiry into the question of possession (3)

The Code was amended by sect 52 of Act All of 1879, the provisions of which were re-enacted in the Code of 1882, and the power of investigation was not himted to the fact of possession. Any question of title trising between the contending parties in connection with their right of possession might be finally determined in such investigation as in in ordinary action of ojectiment. The order, whether for executing or for staying execution, had the force of a decree determining the title and the right of possession. The plaintiff was not forced to a fresh suit or had a right to hiring a fresh suit of the decree was against him.(4). Where possession was shown to have been with the plaintiff the defeudants were not, without showing title in them selves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff's title or to set up a just terti. The onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff's rested with them, and they might prove their title as a defence (5). A Court executing a decree was thus given a special jurisdiction which enabled it to try a claim of which the value of the subject matter fell below the pecumary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction (6).

It will be observed that considerable amendments have been made in the present rule to that been "numbered and registered as a suit between the decree holder as plaintiff and the claimant as defendant". Paragraph 2 under which the Court had power in interestingation of "the hike powers," as if a suit for the property had heen instituted by the decree holder against the claimant, is omitted, as also the third and fourth paragraphs under which the Court passed an order executing or staying execution which had the force of a decree, and was subject to the same conditions as to appeal. The words "with the like powers" were held to mean that the Court has the same powers for enforcing the attendance of parties and witnesses, etc, as it has in a suit (1) as regards appeal. A refusal to number and register the claim was held to amount to the rejection of a plant and was, therefore, appealable, (2) though those decisions have been dissented from (3). Where a claim was registered out of time no appeal lay, but the order could be objected to in an appeal from the final order which had the force of a decree (1). Proceedings taken after a decree for possession under sect 9 of the Specific Relief Let, were in the nature of a fresh suit, and therefore, an appeal lay (5). The Court to which an appeal lay depended on the value of the claim and not that of the original suit (6).

Now the Court, under the second clause of r 97, ante, is to investigate "the matter" If the obstruction is caused by the judgment debtor, the order under r 98 is that the applicant be put in possession. If the obstruction is due to the bona fide claim of a third party, the application is dismissed under this rule. It is not at tick what the scope of the inquiry in the latter case is to be. Presumably, however, it is to be of a summary character, even if it is not limited to the question of possession. For now a right of suit is given by r 103 to persons against whom orders are made under the present rule. Their position is therefore issimilated to that of parties against whom orders are made under in 95, 100, and 102 to whom a right of suit is given by r 103 of this Order

Dispossession by de- is dispossessed of immoreable property by the cree-holder or purchaser holder of a decree for the possession of such property or, where such property has been sold in execution of a decree, by the purchaser thereof, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such dispossession.

ORDER XXII.

Death, Marriage and Insolvency of Parties.

The death of a planning or defendant shall not cause the party's death, if right to aboute if the right to sue survives to the research.

Abatement -It has been pointed out (I) that the practice in respect of shatement under the Code is different from that which prevailed in the English Courts A suit, though perfect in its institution become defective by the death, marriage, or transmission of interest or liability of some of the parties In such case the suit was said to have ahated or become defective, and as a general rule no proceeding could be taken in it until an order to revive the suit or carry on the proceedings had been made. When the abatement was total-that is caused by the death, bankruptes, or insolvency of a single plaintiff or the marriage of a single female plaintiff—the case was completely suspended. and could not be proceeded with until it had been revived or the defect cured Where the abatement was partial merely as when it was caused by the death of the defendant, it prevented those proceedings only by which the interest of the deceased might be affected, for the death of a defendant made au abatement quoed himself alone. Thus ahatement though it suspended the proceedings in a case, did not nut an end to them But it had not the effect of heing a bar to a further suit upon the same cause of action one of the essentials of res audicate heing that the matter must have been determined, and when a suit ahated before judgment nothing had been determined in such suit. Under however, r 9 of this Order (formerly sect 371) when a suit ahates no fresh suit can be brought upon the same cause of action unless and until the order of abatement is set aside The provisions of this Order are substantially those of the last Code Rules 6 and 12 have been added and sub rule (2) has been added to r 10 (formerly sect 372) The last paragraph of sect 582 of the last Code has been made r 11 The provisions of this Order apply to appeals and the words "plaintiff,' "defendant and 'suit' include an appellant a respondent, and appeal respectively (2) They did not, however, under the last Code apply to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment debtor . (3) nor to proceedings in a Mamlatdar s Court (4) As regards execution proceedings, see now r 12, post or the proceeds or value of property, belonging to another, have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his estate or moneys. In such cases, whatever the original form of the action, it is in substance brought to recover property, or its proceeds or value, and by amendment could be made such in form as well as in substance in such cases the action, though arising out of a wrougful act, does not die with the person The property or the proceeds or value which, in the lifetime of the wrong doer, would have been recovered from him, can be traced after his death to his assets, and recaptured by the rightful owner there. But it is not every wrongful act by which a wrong doer indirectly benefits that falls under this head if the benefit does not consist in the acquisition of property or its proceeds in value. Where there is nothing among the assets of the deceased that in law or in equity belongs to the plaintiff, and the damages which have been done to him are unliquidated and uncertain the executors of a wrong doer cannot be sued merely because it was worth the wrong doer s while to commit the act which is complained of and an indirect henefit may have been reaped thereby (1) The right to sue will survive to an executor on an action on breach of contract or a tort if on the face of the proceedings it is shown an injury has accrued to the personal estate (2). It will survive when a Hindu widow sues to recover her husband a estate . (3) to the sons of a Hundu mother who sued to restrain encroachment on the share allotted to her on partition and agreed to sell her interest to the defendants at the value to be found on arbitration, and then died after the award but before the decree , (4) and for the purposes of appeal to the mother of a Mitakshara son who obtained a decree setting aside his father's ahenations , (5) to the representatives of a minor who, on attaining majority, sued to have his rights declared respecting property which by a consent decree and conveyance to which he was no party. his grandmother, father, and uncle conveyed to the defendants and who died pending suit (6) It also survived against the other defendants when a defendant's interest ceased before he died, without his representatives heing added (7) Where an agent suing on behalf of an undisclosed principal dies pending the suit, the suit should after the death of the igent he continued, if it can be continued at all, by the agent s representatives and not by the principal (8)

Not survivo — Causes of action in respect of defamation assault as defined by the Indian Penal Code, and other personal injuries not causing the death of the party, and cases where after the death of the party the relief sought could not be enjoyed or the granting of it would be nugatory e.g. (a) where a passenger was injured but not fatally in a railway collision and died without defendant or defendants alone, the Court shall & cause an entry to that effect to be made on the record, and the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants.

Procedure where one of several plaintiffs or defendants dies and right

Where there are more plantiffs or defer ants than one, and any of them dies, and where the right to sue survives to the surviving plantiff or plaintiffs alone, or against the surviving?

Applicability -- This rule is the equivalent of sect 100 of Act VIII of 1809, save for certain formal amendments made by Act X of 1877, and the words "right to sue ' substituted for "cause of action" by Act XII of 1879 Except for three verbal alterations at is the same as that of the last Code applies to proceedings on appeal (3) Thus if one of the appellants dies and the application to rovive is dismissed as being time barred, the appeal should be ordered to abate so far as the deceased is concerned, and may proceed at the instance of the remaining appellants, (4) it cannot have the effect of causing the whole appeal to abate (5) Again, on the death of one of the respondents the proper course is to proceed under r 4, and either to declare that the appeal has abated as against him, and proceed against the other respondents, or to direct the legal representatives of the deceased respondent to be placed on the record (6) It has been held that a suit does not abate under this rule until the representative of the deceased plaintiff has failed to apply within the time allowed by law (7)

"Right to sue "-See notes to last rule. The rule is not limited in its applie ation to cases where the right to sue or appeal survives against the surviving defendants or respondents not as the legal representatives of the deceised but by reason of a right vested in them antecedent to the suit (8)

"To the surviving plaintiff alone "-On the death of one of two joint owners, suing for damages in respect of trespass, the cause of action survives to the other alone, (9) also where the interest of a defendant ceases in the subject matter of the suit before his death (10)

Errer Sens n DEATH, MARRIAGE AND INSOLVENCY OF PARTIES, 1049 0 22. 1. 3

(1) Where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving Procedure in case of plaintiff or plaintiffs along or a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the right

to sue survives, the Court, on an ambication made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the "suit.

(2) Where within the time limited by law no application for is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned, and, on the application of the defendant, the Court man award to him the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff.

Applicability of clause (1).-This rule amalgamates sects 363 and 365 of the last Code and a portion of sect 366 Sect 363 dealt with the case of soveral plaintiffs, and sect 365 with that of a sole plaintiff. These are now dealt with together in the first clause of the rule. The second clause is the first paragraph of sect 366 of the last Code The second paragraph has been omitted, as also the Explanation to that section As to the definition of "legal representative." see now sect 2, clause (11) The section corresponding with sect. 363 of the last Code, as originally enacted by Act VIII of 1859, sect 101, required the legal representative to make the application to revive, but by Act VII of 1888, this provision and the latter portion of the former section from the words "the Court may cause" as it formerly stood, were substituted. Tho words "right to sue ' were substituted for "cause of action ' hy Act XII of 1879. The rule applies to proceedings on appeal,(1) and on revision,(2) but not under the last Code to proceedings in execution of a decree . (3) or to the case of a plaintiff dying after decree . (4) as to execution proceedings, see now r. 12. post Where there is only an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, but no suit pending in Court, and the applicant dies before the leave is granted, the right to sue as a pauper, being a personal right, cannot survive in the legal representatives of the deceased applicant (5)

Sect 365 in the last Code corresponded with sect 102 of Act VIII of 1859, but underwent much modification Under sect 102 it was optional with the Court to make an order on the application of the legal representative, and it was not until Act VII. of 1888 that the mandatory form came into force. The words" where the cause of action survices" were inserted by Act X of 1877, the words "cause of action" being changed to "right to sue" by Act XII of 1879

"Legal representative "-The legal representative need not, since the passing of Act VII of 1889, if not under sect 50 (of the last Code), take out administration to continue a suit, but must do so hefore decree (6) An executor under Act V of 1881 is the legal representative of the deceased before probate has been obtained, but one of several executors cannot carry on a suit without proving the will (7) The rule presupposes the applicant is the legal repre If the representative character is denied, or where two or more claim it, the procedure under r 5 should be followed, (8) but where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative's right to represent the deceased or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right (9) The words "Legal representative" must, where there are more legal representatives than one, he read in the plural, thus where the appellant ded and only one of his three representatives was brought on the record the appeal nhated, (10) but in Bombay it has been held that an application by one of the heirs of the appellant is sufficient, and the respondent is cutitled to have the names of the others brought ou the record to have them bound by the decree (11) All the legal representatives must be brought upon the record, (12) as far as 18 possible, (13) if any refuse to be joined as appellants they should be midrespondents , (11) or my who cannot or are unwilling to be joined as applicants should be added as defendants (15) and in such a case the application should not be construed as no application by the legal represent itive so as to cause an appeal to abate (16) The sons of a deceased plaintiff, members of a joint 'hit ikshara family, may apply to revive without obtaining administration or a

(6) but this was before there was any section corresponding to sect 372 of the last Code, or r 1 of this, and the deed he set up was post dated to the deed from the appellant under which the respon dents claimed. An executor is the legal representative for the purposes of an appeal of a plaintiff who sned for possession of tarwad property, and to set aside an adoption made by the deceased Larnaran, and, obtaining a decree for possession only, appealed and died (7) An administrator, however, appointed under sect 10 of Reg VIII of 1827, without leave being granted him to sne, is not the legal repre sentative, nor is ho entitled to continue an appeal, (8) nor can the representative of a deceased pauper continue an application for leave to sue as a panper, such right heing only a personal one (9) Again, where the judgment debter in a but for malicious and wrongful conduct sold a share of his property liable to ho ittached in execution and died, the purchaser could not carry on the appeal as his representative as the purchase deed did not make him hable for the deceased s personal debts (10) I urther, a claim hased on personal trust cannot survive to a representative (11)

"Proceed with the suit "-Objection to the applicant heing added as a legal representative should be raised at the earliest opportunity, and failure to object precludes the opposing party from raising it at a later stage (1) So where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative s right to represent, or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right (2)

Applicability of clause (2) -The section in the last Code (366) corresponded with the latter part of sect 102 of 1et VIII of 1859, with certain slight alterations made by Acts X of 1877, and XII of 1879, the explanation being added by the former Act and the words "within the time limited by law and 'shall on the application of the defendant' by the latter Act The second paragraph of sect 366 has been omitted. "Proceed with the suit "-Objection to the applicant being added as a legal representative should he raised at the earliest opportunity, and failure to object precludes the opposing party from raising it at a later stage (1) So where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representa tive's right to represent, or dismiss the suit on finding that he of she had no right (2)

Applicability of clause (2) -The section in the last Code (366) corresponded with the latter part of sect 102 of Act VIII of 1859, with certain slight alterations made by Acts X of 1877, and heing added by the former Act and the words "

FIRST SCHED DEATH, MARRIAGE AND INSOLVENCY OF PARTIFS 1053

"Shall ahate"—The section in the last Code ran, "The Court may pass an order that the suit shall abute" It was proposed to be amended so as to give effect to the principle that ahatement results from the operation of law and does not depend upon the making of an order—It was, therefore, suggested that the Court should merely declare that the suit had abated—The Select Committee, however, struck out the provisions that the Court night make an order declaring the shatement, as in its opinion it was unnecessary, and was likely to give rise to difficulty—If no application is made by the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and the suit is ordered to ahate, it may yet be revived under r. 9, and the order for revival may be made immediately after the order for abatement (1)

"On the application of the defendant"—"Defendant" here includes plaintiff respondent and defendant respondent, (2) but a respondent in a special appeal cannot require the legal representative of the deceased appellant to be substituted and the appeal to proceed. He should file a cross appeal, (3) though it one of the heirs of the deceased appellant has applied to revive, the respondent is entitled to have the names of the other heirs put on the record so as to have them bound by the decree (4). The application must be within any months of the death of the plaintiff (5).

Appeals—The Allahahad High Court held that no appeal hes from an order passed under the first paragraph of the former sect 366 directing a suit to shate,(6) such an order not being a decree, (7) but both the Bomhay and Madras High Courts have held such an order to be a decree (8). No appeal hes from an order rejecting an application for a declaration that a suit had ahated by reason of the death of the pluntiff and the invalidity of an application for revival by the representatives of the deceased plaintiff (9). Where the special appellant dies and no representative applies to be substituted, the respondent cannot require the appeal to proceed. He should file a cross appeal (10).

4 (1) Where one of two or more defendants dies and the surplet to sue does not survive against the surdetendant or of sole defendants of defendants or of sole defendant or sole surviving defendant or sole defendant or sole surviving defendant dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit

- (2) Any person so made a party may make any defence appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant.
- (3) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the sut shall above as against the deceased defendant.

Applicability .- This rule as originally enacted as seet 104 of Act VIII of 1859, was considerably modified and added to Act X of 1877, besides inaking certain verhal alterations, confined the scope to eases of the death of the defendant taking place before decree, and added a paragraph commencing "Provided that the person so made defendant" Act XII of 1879 added the next clause in the last Code from "When the plaintiff foils" to "the suit shall abate,' and substituted the words "right to sue "for "cause of action" Act All of 1882 added the further words from "unless he sotisfies" to "unthin such period," and the last paragraph was added by Act VII of 1888 New amend ments are italicized See post

The section is applicable to a suit for dissolution of partnership where two of the defendants died, and the plaintiff applied to revive (1) It also applies to proceedings on appeal (2) Hence on appeal by the plaintiff against a decree of dismissal the defendant died, on the death being notified to the Court it could not proceed to make a decree against the deceased < estate without revival (3) It further applies to second appeals (4) It, however, only applies to the east of a defendant dving before decree, and not to an application of the representatives of the defendant, who died after an ex parte decree, to be made parties for the purpose of setting aside the decree (5)

The section under the last Code did not apply to execution proceedings, (6) as to this see now r 12, post, nor to investigations in forma paupens under sect 107 (7) of the last Code corresponding with O XXXIII r 5 of this Code Under the provise to sect 232 of the last Code (O XXI r 16), the transfere of a decree could not obtain execution without notice to the judgment debter and where the judgment debtor was dead no such notice could be sent until his representatives were brought on record. turned out that the defendant had died before the presentation of the plaint, the Court had no jurisdiction to substitute the representatives of the deceased as defendants and allow the suit to proceed as against them (1)

- "Right to sue does not survive "-In a suit for redemption against two defendants, the second being the sub mirtgagee of the first, on the death of the first, held on second appeal that no cause of action survived to the plaintiff against the second defendant, and the suit had abated, although the suit had been allowed to proceed against the second defendant (2)
- 'On an application "-On the death of a respondent, the right to have his representatives added vests jointly and not severally in the appellants (3)
- "Legal representative of the deceased defendant "-In an appeal by contributories against an order dismissing with costs an application against certain officers of a company under sect 214 of the Indian Companies Act 1882, on the death of one of the respondents his legal representatives cannot be brought on the record in his place in view of Explanation 2 to such section (4) A Hindu defendant died, herving a will of which no prohate was taken and his property came into the possession of his divided brothers who were brought on the record as representatives and a decree for the plaintiff made by consent. The mother of the deceased who apart from the will was the legal representative sued to set vside decree having previously obtained a declaration that she was entitled to the property as against the hrothers held she was not entitled to maintain the suit as the persons in possession were the proper representatives and the defendant could prove the will to show that she was not the representative (5) See also the notes to r 1 under Legal representative "
- "To be made a party"-Though the Court is hound to place on the record the person named by the plaintiff yet it was held that (acting under sect 32 of the last Code) it could also add the name of any person who had a Lood prima facie claim to be considered the legal representative of the deceased (6) This section as amended by Act VII of 1888 allowed the legal representative of the defendant to apply, and now the Court may proceed "ou an application by either side, so the question of the applicability of that or the corresponding section has now little practical value, vide post. In a recent case under the last Code it was pointed out that sect 368 (now represented by this rule) did not lay on the Court the duty of choosing the representative but that it was for the plaintiff to choose against whom he proposed to proceed, and that if some one else with an adverse claim to the nominee wished to be made the representative he should be added as a party (7)

"And shall proceed "-A person whom the plaintiff alleges is the legal representative of a deceased defendant being brought on the record, the decree will bind the estate of the defendant in the absence of fraud on the part of the plaintiff (1) Where the sole defendant died before decree, a decree passed against him on the supposition he was alive could not, it was held, be executed (2) So an appeal dismissed in ignorance of the death of the respondent who had lost in the first Court must be heard de novo after revival (3)

"The suit shall abate "-This applies to proceedings on appeal (4) So when two of the four appellants appeal through a guardian and the respondent dies and the appeal abates, no application for revival being made, the minors eaunot apply to revive through another guardian (5) Where one of four respon dents died and no application to revive was made within six months, the appeal boing one for the possession of land to which the four respondents claimed to be jointly entitled and in which the right to appeal did not survive against the surviving respondents alone, abated, (6) but where the habilities of the respondents are joint and several, the death of respondents without revival cannot exomrate the others from hability, and the appeal abates only so fir as the deceased respon dent is concerned (7) and where no application is made to revive, an appeal abates only against the respondents who have died (8) So on second appeal where two respondents died and no application was made to revive, the appeal did not abate (9) An appeal does not abate by reason of the failure of an appellant to bring on record the representatives of a deceased respondent if the appeal can proceed in the absence of such representative to a final and complete idjudica tion (10) On the contrary, where the decree could not he reversed without the representatives of the deceased being placed on the record, the appeal nas held to abate (II) Again, in a mortgage suit where the second defendant wa merely a surety personally, and on his death no application was made to revine held the plaintiff was not precluded from continuing the suit against the mort gagor and that the suit did not abate (12) An order for abatement was hell to be absolute (13) The former Code provided that the ant should that unh the plaintiff satisfied th sufficient cause for the delay under this section, and that the case came under sect 32 of the last Code (1). Some Courts were won't to take a strict view of what was "sufficient cause," excluding a plea of ignorance of the law. It was found by experience that a number of suits and appeals bad been held to abate somewhat unfairly through the ignorance of suitors and appellants as to the fact of the decease of a partly and as to the procedure necessary in such a case. It was proposed, therefore, to amend this rule so as to enable the Court in its discretion to allow the plaintiff in a suit to apply to add the name of the legal representative of a decease of defendant at any time before the passing of the decree. But this has not been done, is possibly it was considered that sect 5 of the Limitation let as any highly by the delay in the days of the latter.

Legal representative of a deceased defendant may apply—Before the amendment male by sect J2 of tet VII of 1883 it was held that the Court could not act save on the application of the plaintiff or appliant(J2) and the representative of a sole defendant could not apply to be made defendant,(3) unless the application came within sect 372 (now r 10) (4). The legal representative can apply under thirrulk (see sect 146). If there betwee claimants the Court should deade between them and not put both on the record (5). Where a party defended a suit on alternative defences has legal representative may rely on either (6).

Limitation — An application to have the legal representative of a defendant planntiff respondent or defendant respondent placed on the record must be made within six months from the death of the deceased (7). In a recent case it has been field that seet a of the Limitation Act does not apply to an application under this rule, and that where such an application is made after time the suit or appeal must be declared to have abated, and the remedy for the plaintiff or appellant is to proceed under r 9 of this Order (8).

 $Appeals = \ \ \, \hbox{ in order of abatement under the penultimate elause of the last Code was held to be an order and not a decree and appealable under sect 588 of that Code (9) See now O XLIII r 1$

TIRST SCHED DEATH, MARRIAGE AND INSOLVENCY OF PARTIES. 1059 O 22, rr 6-8

Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing rules, whether the cause of action survives or not, there abatement by shall be no abatement by reason of the death of reason of death after hearing either party between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, but judgment may in such case be pronounced notwithstanding the death and shall have the same force and effect as if it had been pronounced before the death took place.

Death of party after hearing -This is new It was considered that the legal effect of proceedings taken in ignorance of the death of a party was uncertain, and it has therefore been enacted that the mere circumstance of a death among the parties did not invalidate judicial action The English practice has been followed as to the validity of a judgment where a party has died between the conclusion of the hearing and the delivery of the decision (1) The death of a plaintiff before hearing does not justify a dismissal of the sint for default of appearance under O 9, r 8 (2)

(1) The marriage of a female plaintiff or defendant is shall not cause the suit to abate, but the suit Suit not abated by marriage of female party. may notwithstanding be proceeded with to judgment, and, where the decree is against a female defendant, it may be executed against her alone.

(2) Where the husband is by law hable for the debts of his wife, the decree may, with the permission of the Court, be exeeuted against the husband also, and, in case of judgment for the wife, execution of the decree may, with such permission, be issued upon the application of the husband, where the husband 18 by law entitled to the subject-matter of the decice

Husband and wife -This section corresponded with sect 10 of Act VIII al 1859 sive for slight amendments made by Act A of 1977 some now as in the last Code but for one verbal amendment. It applies to proceedings on appeal (3). (2) Where the assignee or receiver neglects or refuses to procedure where assignee tails to continue the suit and to give such security within the time so ordered, the defendant may apply for the dismissal of the suit on the ground of the plaintiff's insolvency, and the Court may make an order dismissing the suit and awarding to the defendant the costs which he has incurred in defending the same to be proved as a debt against the plaintiff's estate

Insolvency -- This rule corresponds with sect 106 of Act VIII of 1859 as modified by Act X of 1877, which (inter alia) extended the section to received appointed under sect 351 of the last Code, and substituted the last portion of the section as it now stands commencing from the words 'apply for the dismissal" The words "shall not cause the suit to abate have been substituted for "shall not bar the suit, ' and an option is given as to taking security rule applies to proceedings on appeal (1) It does not declare that the assign shall be made a party to the suit as the Act does in the east of persons represent ing a deceased party The practice in India was to add or substitute the assigner s name, and he might be called upon to deposit the costs of an appeal, (2) hut now the Official Assignce should give security before the order is made making him t party (3) The form of the order should be one giving the Official Assignce a time within which to elect and give security for costs If that is not done within the time specified the defendant may apply for dismissal (4) The defendant cannot plead abatement without giving the Official Assignce an opportunity of prosecuting the suit (5) This rule does not apply to a case where there has only been an application to declare the plaintiff an insolvent, and a vesting order has been made, but the proceedings are subsequently annulled and the plaintiff is not declared an insolvent (6) It only applies to the case of an insolvent plaintiff not to that of an insolvent defendant. The Assigned has no power to continu the defence of a suit pending at the time the vesting order was made or to get himself in ide a party to a suit with a view of moving for a new trial or for any other purpo c whatsoever He may apply to stay the sunt under sect 13 of th In han Insolvent Act (7)

INSTAULD DEATH, MARRIAGE AND INSULAENCY OF PARTIES 1061

(2) The plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or the assignce or the receiver in the case of an insolvent plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal; and if it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the Court shall set aside the abatement or dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit.

Effect of abatement or dismissal.—This rule corresponds with sect 371 of let X of 1877, save that the word "or" between "deceased" and "bankrupt" (subsequent) "insolient") was inserted by Act XII of 1879. The present amendments are verhel only. Sect 372A has, however, been introduced into the rule as sub rule (3)

This rule applies to proceedings on appeal (2). Before the amendment of sects 368 and 370 of the last Code it was thought the corresponding section referred only to orders passed under the last paragraph of sect 368 and the second paragraph of sect 370 of that Code (3). This opinion however, which was other, was no longer correct after the amendment, for sect 370 of the last Code as amended had no provision for abatement and under sect 368 as amended the abatement was under the penultimate clause, while the first clause of sect 366 also provided for abatement and to such orders of abatement this section was applicable (4). The former section was not applicable to an application by a plaintiff when the defendant is dead, and his representatives ought to have been brought in (3) nor to a case where a plaintiff who after obtaining an order for substitution of the representative of the deceased definition and issue of summons, took no steps, and the sut was dismissed (5)

Practice —A Court may make an order for abatement under r 3 (formerly sect 366), and then revive the suit under this rule, (?) and the order for a hatement may be coupled with an order under this rule (8). When appheations for ahatement and for revival were set down for hearing together, the proper order to pass was held to be to declare the suit to have ahated and then at once to pass an order under this section on sufficient cause being shown (9). The cause of action in the original and revived saits must be the same, no fresh cause of action can be imported into the revived suit (10).

And wherever a matter can be said to full within seet 47, ante, the order as a decree will be appealable. An application by a respondent, whose interest was at one time represented by a receiver, to replace upon the record of the appeal as a party respondent the name of such receiver, which had been stuck off owing to a misrepresentation of fuct, may be treated as an application for review of the order striking off the name of the receiver (5)

11. In the application of this Order to appeals, so far as Application of Order may be, the word "plaintift" shall be held to include an appellant, the word "defindant" a respondent, and the word "suit" an appeal

Appeals —This, with some alterations, is the second portion of sect 583 of the last Code, the first portion of which is the second clause of sect 107, and to the notes of which section reference should be made. Where in a personal action for an injunction a decree was given for the defendant with costs and the plaintiff appealed, but during the pendency of the appeal the defendant respondent died, it was held that the right to prosecute the appeal against his legal representative did not survive (6)

Miscellaneous proceedings — As has been already observed in the notes to the preceding rules the opinion was cherally entertained under the last Code that the Chipter which this Order replaces did not apply to the execution of decrees. The original bill, therefore, proposed to except allevecution proceedings from the operation of this Chapter. On revision, however, it was considered that only the executions expressly mentioned should not apply to such proceedings, and that otherwise the provisions of the Order should be made equally applicable to suits and to proceedings other than suits (7).

ORDER XXIII.

Withdraual and Adjustment of Suits.

- 1. (1) At any time after the institution of a suit the l Withdrawal of suit or plaintiff may, as against all or any of the abandonment of part of defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part claim
 - (2) Where the Court is satisfied-

(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or

(b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with aborty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim

(3) Where the plaintift withdraws from a suit, or abandons part of a claim, without the permission referred to in sub-rule (4), he shall be hable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim

(4) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others.

Withdrawal of suit.—Sub rule (1) is new, save for the first line, which follows the wording used since sect 373 of Act X of 1877. Prior to that it was "at any time before final judgment," such being the terms of sect 97 of Act VIII of 1859. Sub rule (2) originated in sect 97 of Act VIII of 1859. Sect 373 of Act X of 1877 added the words, "that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect," "or to abandon part of his slaim," or for the fait so abandon of "These last words were altered to "or in respect of the fait so abandon of "by Act XII of 1879. The present Code has substituted "allowing the funntity to institute" for "permitting him to bring," and made the other alterations noted in italies. It has omitted after the words "on such terms" the words "as to costs.

that the defence was such that the suit must fail (1) It has been held that while it is impossible to by down any exhaustive definition of "sufficient grounds ' within the meaning of this rule, it may be generally said that the Court should not allow withdrawal of suit after the parties are ready for trial if it would obviously piejudice the defendant (2)

"With liberty to institute a fresh suit "-This does not prevent the Court, when such fresh suit is brought, from entering into the question of res judicata, (3) but a suit is not barred by the principle of res judicata because in the former suit after evidence had been recorded but before judgment liberty to bring a fresh suit had been granted (4) Courts in India have not the power to make a decree of non suit. So where in a suit for enforcement of a hypothecation against immoveable property it was dismissed, in the form in which it was brought, on the ground that the plaintiff having purchased a part, could not sue for the whole of his claim against the rest of the property with permission to bring a fresh suit it was held that such permission ought not to have been granted (5) In a decree wholly dismissing a suit for possession on the ground that the plaintiff had only made out his claim to one third of the property claimed, the liberty given to bring a fresh suit for possession of the one third was a millity and the claim was res judicata in a suit brought in pursuance of the liberty (6). If the permis ion through madvertence be not recorded the omission may be rectified on review (7). The procedure provided in this Order is not the only manner in which a plaintiff can come to Court a second time for adjudication upon the merits of his rights (8) I imitation applies to the second suit as if it was the first (9)

grant"-The order should not be for the dismissil of the " May suit but in terms of this rule (10) The proper order is one which limits the time in which the payment should be made and which soes on to direct that on fulnto to pay within that time the original suit is dismis ed with costs (11) Apart from this rule the Courts in this country have no power to dismiss a suit and give a plantiff have to bring a fresh suit on the same matter (12). It has ben held that the dismis of of a suit in the form it was brought do a not amount to permission to such a um (13) Intitlus has been discrited from (14). Where the order was made so as to enable the plaintiff in the first suit to include a portion of his elum omitted in the original suit and such fresh suit was brought, it was held that the additional portion was not barred by sect 7 of Act VIII of 1859 (3) Where an Appellate Court, instead of deciding upon an appeal, refers the appellant to a fresh suit, the order whether right or wrong if accepted by the parties, is hinding upon them (4) A Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act, in the exercise of his revisional powers, cannot do so no such application having been made to the Lower Court (5)

paties to a suit enlarging by consent or compromise the original claim and tting or allowing a decree for a greater amount of money or land than that originally a ked for (1) Where a compromise goes beyond the subject matter of the suit, and a decree is made on the basis of the compromise, although the decree in respect of the surplusage cannot be executed (2) the defendant is hound by its terms if he benefited therefrom The Madras High Court have, however, held that a decree passed in terms of a compromise entered into between parties and comprising therein reliefs not covered by the suit, is yet enforce able in execution, provided that there is nothing unlawful about the terms though the decree itself as drafted might have been objected to on an appeal therefrom (3) The decree passed on a compromise cannot be regarded as ultra tires simply because it goes beyond the subject matter of the suit and contains other conditions. If such other considerations are the considerations for the compromise they must be incorporated in the decree, if they are indepen lent they may be regarded as surplusage (1) But where the suit was for money, and the defendant agreed to his property being charged as a term of the compromise, it was held a decree could be made embodying the charge (5) If the compromise affected matters outside the suit, and it was agreed that if one party failed to carry that portion out the other could sue in respect thereof the section does not prevent the same being enforced by suit (6) The language of the section is wide and general and does not preclude parties from settling their disputes ou such lawful terms as they might agree to without heing restricted to such relief as one only of the parties had chosen to claim in the plaint. In a suit for money where the plaint asked for a simple money decree an agreement that the amount decreed should be a charge on certain properties was held to be both lawful and to relate to the suit (7) When by unregistered documents a compromise going beyond the scope of the suit was affected but only such portion as related to the suit recorded and decreed that portion required no registration and the finding thereon was res judicata and if the decree had referred to or narrated the other terms of compromise it would have been judicial evidence of that portion of the compromise (8) But an agreement outside the scope of the suit although incorporated in the decree does not operate as res judicata (9) When a consent decree was passed in terms of compromise with a reservation that only the property claimed in the suit could be obtained in execution a subsequent suit in respect of other property dealt with in the compromise based upon hoth title and the compromise was not barred by this rule or by O II

It is of the utmost importance that witnesses should be examined in open Court, and by the Court itself Ameens or other Commissioners must not be made the real Judges of important questions of law and fact, which it is the duty of the Court itself to determine Local investigations ought to he restricted to points which really require some local inspection for their elucidation Witnesses therefore cannot be examined out of Court, except with reference to points for the determination of which local inspection is required (1) An Ameen should be appointed to hold a local investigation only when it is necessary to inspect the land, to make maps, to obtain information with regard to physical features, to identify land in maps with parcels which are the subject of suit, to identify maps with one another with the aid of objects to be found on the land For these and similar purposes an Ameen may examine witnesses when the evidence which they have to give is of such a nature that it ought to be taken by him on the spot Where, however, any fact can be proved by evidence taken otherwise than on the spot it should be taken in Court (2) In short, the local investigation referred to in this rule presupposes the existence on the record of independent evidence which requires to he clucidated, and that rule does not authorize a Court to delegate to a Commissioner the trial of any material issue which it is bound to try (3) The last Code after the words " nett profits," ran "and the same cannot be commently conducted by the Judge in person" These words, it was held, showed that when a Judge could conveniently conduct a local investigation in person he should do so The information so derived by him was a matter which, of course, he could take into his consideration in deciding the case (4) But it was considered desirable that he should put the result on record so that the parties might see what he considered established (0) Though a Judge might view a spot he could not, in a case where the issue was whether two persons were man and wife, go himself to the village where the parties lived in order that he might make inquiries amongst their neighbours He should in such case, summon witnesses and examine them in Court (6) These werds have now been omitted. And it has been recently held that the omission of these words indicates that a Indge should only make a local investigation where it is meces any for the purpose of understanding the evidence, and should not do so for the purpo c of githering information to be used for his pidement, for if addition of information is required his proper course is to appoint a Commis ioner who e report can be used in evidence and who can be examined as a witness (7)

"May Issue"—The Judge has a discretion which must be judicially exercised to grant or refuse a local investigation. A local investigation is not importative in every case, and a Judge is not bound to issue a commission of his own motion (1) Though the propriety of the order may, under sect 105, he questioned in regular appeal, it cannot be made the subject of direct or special appeal (2) When a Judge has ordered a fresh local investigation, his successor should not interfere with the order, but carry it ont before disposing of the case, (3) nor where one inquiry has been carried on, should a second issue for the same purpose without setting aside the first (4) If the Court considers it necessary to order an inquiry, such an inquiry cannot be left to be made after decree (5)

"Such person"—Subject to the Provise, any person whom the Court thinks fit may be appointed A Munsif may be appointed Commissioner (6). The section itself, however, does not now require that an officer of Government should be appointed (7). But a Jindge should not order a Subordinate Judge, whose judgment is before him on appeal, to go and inspect the locality and make a report. A Judge from whose decision an appeal is pending, is the most unsuitable person to make such investigation (8).

"To make such investigation"—A Commissioner is bound not to go be sond the points referred to him for inquiry (9) Where a Commissioner was only appointed to draw a map and no power was given to him to take evidence, statements of persons recorded hy him were held not to he evidence, and ought not to have been looked at by the Judge (10) Notice should be given to the parties of the time when the local investigation will be held (11)

Proceedings—This includes both the evidence taken (3) and the Commissioner's report or opinion (4) Adistinction is drawn in the second paragraph between the proceedings which may or may not be accompanied by a report of the Commissioner's opinion and the report. The section is now more clearly worded

"Shall be evidence "-The Commissioner's proceedings are an inquiry for the information of the Court not a trial. His position is different from that of a Judgo trying a cause. The proceedings which include his report when he is required to report, are under this section to be treated as merely evilence in the cause. If therefore he finds a fact his finding is only evidence of that first but not a decision upon it. The report cannot be regarded as a judgment of a Court for standing by itself it is inoperative. It requires affirmance by an order of a Court to make it operative (5) It is only ovidence if the Court is not dissatisfied with it The section does not restrict the grounds of dissatisfaction (6) The Court must be satisfied with the proceedings before it adopts them The Court will no doubt in all cases give due weight to the opinion of the Commissioner and the duty cast upon it of satisfying itself as to the proceedings is in practice modified to this extent that it is usual to confine the examination to those parts of them to which exception has been taken by the parties but the duty to that extent at all events remains and can only be dis charged by such an examination as is sufficient for the purpose of satisfying the Court that the investigation has been conducted by the Commissioner fairly and in accordance with lim (7)

Powers and duty of Appeal Court—The fact that the judgment of the Court of first instance is an affirmance of the report of a Commissioner, does not affect the powers of a Court of Appeal though when the case comes before the latter the situation is of course somewhat different What has them it is necessary to enter upon complicated inquiries, the proper course to pursue is to appoint a Commissioner This course may properly be pursued in the first instance if the account required is not of such a nature as to render it probable that there will be no difficulty in dealing with the disputed items in Court (1)

Examination.-The Court furnishes the Commissioner with such proceedings and instructions as are nece sary (r 12) The Commissioner may examino the parties and any witnesses (2) which may be produced, and call for and examine documents relevant to the inquiry (r 16)

Proceedings .- Thus meludes both the evidence taken (3) and the Commissioner's report or opinion (1) A distinction is drawn in the second paragraph between the proceedings which may or may not be accompanied by a report of the Commissioner's opinion and the report. The section is now more clearly worded

"Shall be evidence."-The Commissioner's proceedings are an inquiry for the information of the Court, not a trial. His position is different from that of a Judge trying a cause. The proceedings, which include his report when he is required to report, are under this section to be treated as merely cyclence in the cause II, therefore he finds a fact his fluding is only evidence of that fact, but not a decision upon it. The report cannot be regarded as a judgment of a Court for, standing by itself, it is inoperative. It requires affirmance by an order of a Court to make it operative (5) It is only evidence if the Court is not dissatisfied with it. The section does not restrict the grounds of dis-ati-faction (6) The Court must be enti-fied with the proceedings before it adopts them The Court will no doubt in all cases give due weight to the opinion of the Commissioner, and the duty cast upon it of satisfying itself as to the proceedings is in practice modified to this extent that it is usual to confine the examination to those parts of them to which exception has been taken by the parties, but the duty to that extent at all events remains, and can only he dis charged by such an examination as is sufficient for the purpo e of satisfying the Court that the investigation has been conducted by the Commi sioner fairly and in accordance with law (7)

Powers and duty of Appeal Court -The fact that the judgment of the Court of first instance is an aftirmance of the report of a Commissioner, does not affect the powers of a Court of Appeal, though when the case comes before the latter the situation is, of course somewhat different What has

then to be dealt with is the decree of the Court below, and when this ever effect to the findings of the Commissioner, there is the added weight of the Judge's decision. But the duty of the Appellite Court is commensurate with that of the Court of first instance, and if it is dissatisfied with the proceedings in whole or in part, it is meanibent on it to do that which the Lower Court ought to have done, namely, to set them aside either wholly or partially, and send the matter back for such further inquiry is may be necessary (1). Decree -In suits for partition of immoveable property not paying revenue to Government, the Court, if it has the information before it necessary to enable it to make a decree not only declarme the rights of the parties but actually fixing the particular meas, or rooms, or parts of the houses, as the case may be, of which possession is to be given to the parties respectively in partition, may make such a decree without employing the procedure of these rules, and the decree so made would be enforceable in execution, and possession of the re pective areas, 100ms, etc., could be given to the parties in execution of the decree (1) But where, as most generally happens, a Court has not the information necessary to the making of such a decree, it must make a preliminary or interlocutory decree of a declaratory nature, and then adopt the procedure of these rules by appointing . Commissioner, or Commissioners, whose duty will be, not to give possession, for at that period there would be no decree expable of execution by possession but who should allot such shares to the parties, award the sums to be paid in case sums are to be paid, and then prepare and sign a report appointing the shares and distinguishing such shares by metes and bounds, if ordered to to do (2) The Commissioner, or Commissioners, must then submit that report to the Court, and the Court, after giving the parties an opportunity of object ing (3) to the report, might under the last Code quash the report and proceedings of the Commissioner or Commissioners, and issue a new commission, or (where the Commissioners agreed) pass a deciee in accordance with the report. The decree in accordance with such report would be a decree allotting the specific shares, areas, rooms, etc., distinguishing them where po sible, by metes and bounds or other adequate description, and decreeing to the respective parties possession of those portions of the property allotted to them In the latter case that would be the final decree It is true that the interlocutory decree would be appealable, (4) but for all that it is not the final decree or the decree which is capable of execution, except possibly for such costs as it might award to be paid It is merely of the character of an interlocutory and declaratory dccree (5) It is only after a decree has been made by the Court expressing its approval of the partition scheme that there is any decree capable of execution as a partition decree (6) In a case which falls under the second of the above mentioned categories, the appointment of a Commissioner, whether he be the Amin of the Court or some one else, is not the issuing of a process in execution of a decree, nor are any proceedings of such Commissioner the carrying out of any process in execution The time has not yet arrived for execution of the decree (7) Proceedings under this rule for the purpose of effecting partition are proceedings in the suit itself and not proceed is in execution of a decree (8)

The amendments in clause (2) and the addition of clause (3) replace the following words in the former section "either quash the same and issue a new commission or (where the Commissioners gares in their report) mass a decree in accordance therewith" The provisions are the same with this difference, that the Court has not now to pass a decree where the Commissioners agree, but has in every case nower to confirm, vary, or set aside (1) The action of an Amin appointed under this rule in a partition suit to demarcate the shares assigned to the respective parties to the suit is not the executing of a process for enforcing the judgment within the meaning of article 164 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. 1877 (2) An order passed in a suit for partition, subsequently to the prehimmary decree appointing a commission to make the partition, is not an order in execution, and therefore is not appealable under sect 47. It is an interlocutory order pending the suit which has not been finally decided, and the appellant may take objection to it in an appeal against the final decree (3) Where in suits for partition, possession is sought of a definite share of a property consistmg of a number of houses, the principle in such cases is, that if a property can be partitioned without destroying the intrinsic value of the whole property or of the shares, such partition ought to be made, but where partition cannot be made without destroying the intrinsic value of the property, then a money compensa tion should be given (4) The decree must be stamped (5)

Appeal.— In application for the appointment of a Commissioner was held not to be a matter coming within the scope of sect 244 (new 47), and therefore no appeal lay from an order made on such application (6)

General provisions

15. Costs —Costs of a commission to take evidence was generally made costs in the cause, (7) and this has been done where a commission issued to examine a purdanashin at her own request (8). A Commissioner has no lien on a return of partition for his fees, and cannot refuse to give it up till they are paid (9).

While it is competent to a Court to require that a sum should be deposited, the omission to exercise this power does not debar a Commissioner from recovering his remineration from the party at whose instance he was engaged (1). It has been held by the Madras High Court (2) that the Code does not authorize the dismissal of a suit on refusal or failure of a party to deposit the amount ordered under this section. When after the issue of a commission it is found that the work is in excess of the amount paid in for the costs of the comonison, and that the party at whose instance the commission was issued is not willing to pay, the only way in which the additional costs can be realized is by making the amount costs of the suit, and entering the same in the decree. An order for depositing additional costs when not entered in the decree crimet he enforced (3)

Powers of Commissioner—A Commissioner was under the last Code vested with the powers of a Cril Court to summon winnesses and enforce their attendance under the provisions of the Code—But a private Commissioner, without the machinery of a Court, might find prietical difficulty in enforcing the order. In a case in which a private Commissioner experienced difficulty in enforcing the attendance of witnesses before him, the Colutta High Court directed the return of the commission and sent it under sect 386 (now r. 4) to the Cril Court, within whose jurisdiction the witnesses resided (1). It has, therefore, been critical that, as is already the prictice in many places, a private commissioner may cause his processes to be executed through the Court having local jurisdiction where the witnesses reside. It has been held in Bombay, on the Original Side, that an attachment will issue to compet a party to obey an order made by a Commissioner upon the certificate of the Commissioner that such order has been made and disobeyed without in the first instance, making such order a rule of Court (2)

18. (1) Where a commission is issued under this Order, Parties to appear before the Court shall direct that the parties to the commissioner in person or by their agents or pleaders.

Subscription and verification of plaint —The Code enables a principal officer of a corporation to verify a plaint, and it is therefore not necessary that permission for that purpose should be obtained, but it should be shown in cases to which I applies, that the person purporting to verify a plaint is a principal officer and is able to depose to the facts of the case. ORDER XXX.

Suits by or against Firms and Persons earrying on business in names other than their own

1 (1) Any two or more persons claiming or being hable as Sung of partners in partners and carrying on business in British name of firm.

India may sue or be sued in the name of the firm (if any) of which such persons were partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, and any party to a suit may in such case apply to the Court for a statement of the names and addresses of the persons who were, at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, partners in such firm, to be furnished and verified in such manner as the Court may direct

(?) Where persons sue or are sucd as partners in the name of their firm under sub rule (1), it shall, in the case of any pleading or other document required by or under this Code to be signed, verified or certified by the plaintiff or the defendant, suffice if such pleading or other document is signed, verified or certified by any one of such persons

2 (1) Where a suit is instituted by partners in the name of their firm, the plaintiffs or their pleader shall, on demand in writing by or on behalf of any defendant, forthwith declare in uriting the names and places of residence of all the persons constituting the firm on whose behalf the suit is instituted

(2) Where the plaintiffs or their pleader ful to comply with any demand made under sub rule (1), all proceedings in the suit may, upon an application for that purpose, be stayed upon such terms as the Court may direct

(3) Where the names of the partners are declared in the manner referred to in sub rule (1), the suit shall proceed in the same manner, and the same consequences in all respects shall follow, as if they had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint

the name of the firm

3 Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their served. firm, the summons shall be served either—

(a) upon any one or more of the pathers, or
(b) at the principal place at which the pathership business is earried on within British India upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the pathership business there, as the Court may direct, and such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm so sued, whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India:

Provided that, in the case of a partnership which has been dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, the summons shall be seried upon every person within British India whom it is sought to make liable.

Suits by or against firms.—"Firm" is simply a compendions expression to the several persons who are members of it, and the general law knows nothing of the firm as a body or artificial person distinct from the members composing it. The Judicature enabled partners to sue or be sued in the names of their firms, but this rule did not introduce anything that amounts to the recognition of the firm as an artificial person as distinct from its members (1). This Order dealing with this subject is entirely new. It is, with the exception of r 4, taken from 0.48a of the English Rules. The following notes are also taken from each portions of the notes in the Annual Practice on those rules as are of appleability in this country.

"Carrying on business in British India."-If the firm carry on business within the jurisdiction within the meaning of the cases cited below, they may sue or he sucd in the firm name. It happens that in all the cases cited in this and the note on " Foreign kirms, the points raised turned upon the question whether the defend into were rightly sued. But the principle laid down in those cases applies equally to a plaintiff firm as to a defendant firm, the right to " sue or be sued" being given by the same sentence of this rule. It is, therefore, the practice of the Central Office in Lingland to refuse to issue a writ wherein a foreign firm is either plaintiff or defendant, unless the individual names of the partners are given The words carrying on husiness ' do not include an agency, even though the name of the firm b painted on the door of the office of the agency (8) Semble, "carrying on business 'means the possession within the jurisdiction of a place of business held in the name of the firm where business is carried on on behalf of the firm by a partner or by a person or persons in the pay of the firm (9) If the firm has no place of business in this country held in the name of the firm they do not earry on business within the jurisdiction even though the partners come to this country regularly in order to purchase goods to be sent to the firm

The effect of the addition to the English rule of the words "carrying on husiness within the jurisdiction," is to establish, out of all the cases cited in the note on "Foreign Firms," the decision of Chitty, J ,(3) that where a firm carried on husiness in England and a partner was a resident in England, service it the principal place of business upon the person in control of the husiness, was good service on the firm, including any foreign partner resident abroad (4) Moreover, the rule as now framed appears to go even one step further, seeing that under its terms a foreign firm consisting of two or more persons (5) can be sued as a firm, provided it carries on business within the jurisdiction, whether a partner resides in this country or not For though Wright, J, held otherwise, (6) the C A refused to indorse his ruling on this point (S C). And in the case cited (7) it was held that partners usually resident abroad and having a London office in the firm name were rightly sued as a firm. If the foreign firm does carry on business within the jurisdiction the partners are persons sued as partners in the name of their firm under r. 1, and service on the person in control of the business 18 good service on the firm, including all the partners out of the jurisdiction so far as, but no further than (see O XXI r 50), any property of the partnership within the jurisdiction is concerned. It makes no difference whether the partners abroad are foreign subjects or British subjects It is not allegiance to the Crown which is in question, but whether the firm and its partners are subject to the juris diction of the Court If they carry on business within the jurisdiction in the firm name, then the rule, which must be read with O XXI r 50, applies (8) If the firm does not carry on business within the jurisdiction it cannot be sued in the

And the hability of partners who have left the firm prior to or since the action commenced is a question of fact which may be rused under 0 NNI r 50 (2). A judgment against the firm has the same effect as a judgment against all the partners had formerly (3). If final judgment has been obtained against a firm upon a writ issued against the firm, execution cannot issue against a member of the firm without leave of the Court, unless such member comes within the provisions of 0 NNI r 50 (a), (b), (c), and Under the English rules, if a firm has recovered judgment, and one member afterwards dies, the survivor may issue execution (1). A firm cannot appear as a firm, but if a partner, together with the firm, are made co defendants, he may put in separate defences, one for himself, and one for the firm (5).

"At the time of the accruing of the cause of action "—These words enable the co partners in a firm dissolved before action to sue or be sued as a firm provided the co partnership existed at the time the cause of action accrued And hy the operation of r 10, infra, it enables an individual trading in a name other than his own name at the time the cause of action accrued to he sued in his trading name, although he has ceased to so trade at the time the action was brought

Foreign firms—The ruling in the following cases applies to a plaintiff foreign firm suing as well as to a defendant foreign firm being suid foreign firm suing as well as to a defendant foreign firm being suid foreign firm all the partners in which reside abroad cannot be served as a firm. The partners should be sued and served individually (6). The same rule applies to a colonial firm (7). A foreign firm baving a resident partner in England who transacts business for the firm hut not having an office occupied in the firm is name cannot be sued as a firm, and a writ so issued and served upon such resident partner, together with the service thereof was set aside (8). A single individual residing abroad and being a foreign subject and earrying on business in this country in the name of a firm, must be sued individually in his own name (9). If a single individual who is a foreigner is sued in his own name and served with the writ while temporarily business in England was held good service on

ORDER XXXII.

Suits by or against Minors and Persons of Unsound Mind.

- 1. Every suit by a numor shall be instituted in his name (s. Minor to sue by next by a person who in such suit shall be called the next friend of the minor.
- "Minor "-The Code is applicable generally to all descriptions of parties, whether plaintiff or defendant, and its provisions apply as well to minors as Thus a minor can be directed to file a written statement, and his buit is liable to be dismissed if he fails to do so, and an afhdavit of documents may be required of a minor defendant Doubtless, it is not intended that an infant party to a suit should personally obey such orders. It is evident from the provisions of the Codes that it is intended that his next friend or guardian should oboy the orders of the Court on his behalf Hence, in construing the Code, an exception cannot be read as to infants into its provisions generally, but rather a proviso that orders given to an infant may be obeyed for such infant by his next friend or guardian nor can this be done in construing sect 380 (now O XXV r 1) (I) The Indian Majority Act of 1875 enacts that every person, save as therein otherwise provided, shall attain his majority at the completion of his eighteenth year This Act governs Hindus and Mahomedans, and all other British subjects European or atherwise, domiciled in British India Where a guardian has been appointed before the age of eighteen, dis ability extends to twenty one (2) The minority of an English subject not domiciled in India is twenty one years (3)
- "Next friend"—As regards suits on behalf of minors, Acts ML of 1858, and MX of 1864, relating to guardians, bave been repealed by Act VIII of 1890, and the present law is to be found in the rules of the Code which embody the amendments of this Act (4) The effect of this rule and r i is that if there be a guardian he alone can institute the suit unless the Court gives leave to

It is unnecessary, as majority is one of the required qualifications under r 1 The protection of the minor's interests is left to persons who may be willing to come forward at the risk of costs, and subject to that risk any person may do so (1) In either case the person sum for the minor is called his next friend A minor cannot sue alone He ern only sue or be sued by a next friend or guardian ad litem, and a deerce can only be given for or against him if thus duly represented The reason why no proceeding can be taken by an infant without the assistance of a next friend is on account of an infant's (2) supposed want of discretion, and his mability to hind himself and make himself hable for costs (3) So far as the immor is concerned, the object of his appointment is to secure the minor's interests, and as regards the defendant, in order that there may he some one before the Court to whom the defendant can look for his cost if successful Tho rule was intended for the protection and hencfit of defendants as in England it has been held that when a defoudant waives this benefit and protection the suit may proceed without a next friend (1) Any sane, adult person not a defendant, and having no interest adverse to the minor, may be a next friend (5) No person can be made a next friend without his consent (6) Although the consent of a minor to the institution of a suit hy a next friend is immaterial and a suit may be instituted on his behalf whether he consents or not, the suit is in fact brought in his name and is treated as a suit brought by him (7) The minor is the real plaintiff (8) The next friend is not a party to the suit but a person whose duty it is to prosecute the suit for the minor, and he cannot therefore appeal in his own name (9) The right of a minor to sue by a next friend is a matter of principle, and a rule independent of statutory enactment, and therefore a minor may sue for possession in a Mamlatdar's Court by his next friend although the Manilatdar's Act (Bom, Act III of 1876) makes no provisions for such a

The defendant should apply to have the plaint taken off the file or amended, and if this is not done the next friend's name may be treated as mere surplusage (5) Where, on the other hand, the defendant contends that the plaintiff is a minor. If the suit fails, the next friend will be ordered to pay the defendant the costs, an order addressed to the minor in person to pay those costs heing illegal (9). But as hetween the next friend and the minor, the former is prima facto entitled to costs (10). The Court may,(11) and usually does direct that the next friend should, though the suit be insucces ful, have his costs out of the estate. It friequently is right to make a next friend or guardian hable for costs, but there are also cases in which it is not proper to hold him personally liable (22). not passed under this rule. Such a case is not expressly provided for in the Code, but the practice is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the nunor to have himself properly represented in the suit by a next friend (1). The Court as a rule only strikes a plaint off the file where it appears on its face that it was filed by a person who was a minor, or where it is proved that it was filed with the knowledge that the plaintiff was a minor, and with the intention of deceiving the Court and evading the payment of costs in case the plaintiff falls in the claim. Where the fact of minority is a bonā fide question of evidence and the defendant's allegation is found correct, then the usual course is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented (2). No objection can be taken as to the minority of a plaintiff after remand by the High Court unless the point was urged in the Appel late Court (3). While the person presenting the plaint is liable for costs where a plaint is filed by a minor without a next friend, neither this nor the last rule gives a Court authority to make a minor's easted lable for costs (4).

3. (1) Where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being is Guardian for the suit to be appointed by Court appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor of the suit for such minor.

hehalf of the menor or by the plaintiff

(4) Such application shall be supported by an affidavit venfying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in controls in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that he is a fit person to be so appointed

(4) No order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority compitent in that behalf or, where there is no such guardian upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or, where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the numer is, and after hearing any objections which may be urged on behulf of any person served with notice under this sub-rule and permitted to act as such on the minor's behalf (1) These provisions have been taken from the Original Sido rules (2) The same reasons which require the representation of an infant plaintiff (3) apply to the case of an infant defendant A minor may appear by attorney or pleader, but he can only plead or conduct the defence by his guardian (4) As to the age of majority, see notes tor 1, ante A guardian ad litem is not within the scope of sect 3 of the Majority Act (5) The rule assumes that there is a suit which may, and indeed must be instituted before a guardian is appointed, and limitation counts from the date of the plaint and not from the appointment of the guardian (6)

Upon the institution of a suit against an infant the question of service of summons is one of some difficulty. There are no special provisions as to the service of summons upon infants, and therefore the same rules appear to aprly as in the case of adults (7) Summons should be assued and served on the minor Where there has been neither personal nor substituted service on the minor defendant or on the certificated guardian, and an ex parte decree has been passed, it will be set aside under sect 108 (now O IX r 13) (8) Where, however, it was not definitely shown that any attempt was made to serve the summons upon the infauts personally, or upon their mother before serving it upon the only adult male member and Larta of the family, but it was not shown that the alleged irregularity had caused any prejudice, it was held to be cured by sect 578 (now sect 99) (9)

Subsequent to the issue of summons, the Court must proceed under this rule to satisfy itself of the fact of innority (10) Where no guardiau ad litem 15 appointed (mere notice of a proposal to appoint a person being insufficient) and an ex parte decree is passed, it will be set aside (11) And where it is so satisfied, the Court should proceed to the appointment of a guardian It is the duty of the Court to see that a minor's interests are properly represented (12) The provisions of the rule are mandatory, and should be strictly followed (13)

No order appointing a guardian should be inside expante, so that opportunity may be given for the making of an application on behalf of the infant under r 3, though the fact that an order appointing a guardian at the instance of the plaintiff is made expinters not necessarily fatal to the suit (1). If the innor or his friends and relatives, in whose care he may be, fail to move the Court to appoint a guardian, then the appointment may be made at the instance of the plaintiff (2). The appointment is made by the Court and not by the parties, though it is on their application, (3) and by the Court in which the higation is pending (4). The appointment of a guardian od litem under this rule is wholly distinct from the appointment of a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act (5). The Code whether or not a tet gives precedence.

Though advisable it is not necessary that there should be a formal order of appointment if it appears on the face of the proceedings that the Court has sanctioned the appointment (7)

As to who may be appointed, seer 4 Sub rule (2) of that rule gives precudence (3) to guardians of the person or property unless special reasons exist against their appointment. So while there is nothing to prevent a guardian sumg her ward in such a case the minor must be represented by some other person whose interest is not adverse to him (9). Where a guardian filed a written statement which was prepulcical to the interests of the minor, the Court observed that in a suit in which it is not necessary for a minor defendant to take an active part, no guardian is ever justified in taking any step prejudicent to his ward. If he can do nothing positively for the minor's benefit he ought simply to leave the matter to the Court (10). A father cannot act as guardian ad litem of his son when there is a clear conflict of interest between them. Thus where a father, professing to act as the head of a Mitalshara family executed a mortgage of the family joint-property, it was not open to him to impugn its validity, but

it would be the duty of the guardian ad lifem of the infant son to urge as a defence that the mortgage was beyond the scope of the father's authority, and it was therefore held that the father could not be the guardian ad litem (1) Where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant is not a minor, and minority is pleaded as a defence to an action, masmuch as an alleged minor cannot be treated as if he was of full age during the investigatious of any material averment in a suit a guardian should be appointed for the defendant and a prelimmary issue should be framed and tried as to whether the defendant is or is not a minor (2) Though by sect 440 of the last Code the next friend of a plaintiff might be made hable for costs there was no similar express provision with respect to a guardian But according to the English practice, which has been followed by the Bombay High Court, he has been made to pay costs where he has been guilty of gross misconduct in the case, (3) as where a guardian put executors to proof of a will which he wished to upset for his own private purposes, and which the evidence showed was to his knowledge duly executed (4) The Madras High Court, in a case (5) which does not appear to have been considered in the one last cited, has held that the Code does not authorize a Court to decree costs against the guardian of a defendant except in the case referred to in sect 458 (now r 11) which deals only with costs when a guardian is removed

"Shall appoint"-The provisions are imperative, and where they are not substantially complied with the minor is not properly represented and any decree which may be passed against him is a nullity (6) Thus where a decree had been passed against a minor who was described in the suit as of age it was held that it was a nullity so far as he was concerned (7) The Court must not only appoint a guardian but satisfy itself that the proposed guardian is a fit and proper person to represent the nunor, to put in a proper defence and generally to act in the interests of the minor The duty of the Court is not a mere matter of form (8)

Clause (4) -This is hased on sect 443 of the last Code The Legislature has considered it necessary to ensure that notice should reach one interested in the minor s welfare and this rule aims at securing this result. It was beld that the appointment, apparently by an oversight as guardian ad litem to a minor defendant, of a person other than the certificated guardian amounted t no more than an irregularity not vitiating the decree or sale thereunder see next rule clause (2) (9)

Receipt of property under decree —This section was substituted in the last Code by Act VIII. of 1850 sett. 53 (d). It has been held that this rule did not apply in the case of a managing member of a Mitak-hara joint-family who was appointed guardian ad litem of his numer brother for the purpose of a rent sur in which both the brothers obtained a decree for arrears of rent (d)

Agreement or compromise by next friend or guardian for the suit shall without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend parties other than the minor.

Scope of rule.—The provisions of this rule are intended to protect the interests of immors, (4) and have been adopted (5) from the rule previously laid down by the Privy Council (6) A suit relating to the estate or person of an infant, and for his lenefit, less the effect of making him a word of Court, and no act can be done affecting the projectly of the minor unless under the express or implied direction of the Court uself (1). This principle on which the linkers based, has been applied to a case which, it was held, strictly did not fall within its terms, it being held that when the next friend of a minor withdrew from a suit, though it was not proved that the defindant entered into my agreement with the next friend, it was not proved that the defindant entered into my agreement with the next friend, it was open to the minor through another mixt friend, thought guilty of no fraudulent conduct, was grossly negligent of the minor's interest in withdrawing from the suit (2). The rule contemplates the existence of a guirdian and a pending litigation, and was therefore held not to apply where, when

As to the effect of a compromise entered into without have, rule post. Where a compromise was effected and allowed by the Court, and a decree was under in accordance with its terms, it was held that no apps all ay against the compromise decree, and that the remedy for setting it aside was by way of review or regular suit (1). Where a guardrin had entered into a compromise without leave but undertook to present the petition to Court and subsequently declined to do so, and opposed a decree being passed in its terms, it wis held that intenued a sleave had not been asked for and the guardian objected to the Court passing a decree in terms of the compromise, the Court had no power to enforce it, even though its terms might appear to be beneficial to the minors (3). A decree holder who rists his case, upon his decree having been made against a minor by consent, is under the necessity of proving that the consent was given by some one having authority to hind the minor (6).

Leave.—The Court has to grant leave The form, however, of expression us of slight importance The question is whether the Court, after a consideration of the circumstances, really intended to grant leave (7) The Court must, however, in some form show that it has considered the question and granted leave And the mere passing of a decree on a compromise does not amount to sanction, which will not be interred from the subsequent passing of a decree in terms of such compromise (8) In order that a compromise may be binding upon a minor, the leave of the Court must be express, and it must be arrived at upon the exercise of a judicial discretion is at the propriety of the compromise in the interests of the minor and the section makes no exception in the case of a certified guardi in (1) Under the last Code such leave was presumed in certain cases (2) The amended rule now requires that the leave should be expressly recorded following the Privy Council decision that it should in some way, not open to doubt, he shown that the leave of the Court was obtained (3) Where a Hindu father was party to a partition suit and was himself the guardian ad litem of his minor son (also a party) it was held that the fact that he repre sented the family did not exempt him from the duty of obtaining leave for a compromise which was clearly intended to affect the son's interest, and that since such leave was not obtained, the son was not bound by it (1)

The Court should not make a decree by consent against an infant with out ascertaining that it is for his benefit that such a decree should be pro nounced (5) The Court must have before it the materials necessary to enable it to airive at a judicial conclusion with respect to the compromise The terms und evidence of their propriety and reasonableness must be before it (6) In order to make an agreement or compromise, to which this rule applies, a lawful agreement or compromise, it is necessary that the next friend or guardian should ask the Court to consider the proposed terms of the agreement or com promise, and before making the agreement or entering into the compremise should obtain permission from the Court to enter into the agreement or com promise proposed The Court should record the fact that such application was made to it, that the terms of the proposed agreement or compromise were considered by the Court, and that, having regard to the interests of the unau, the Court granted leave to the making of the agreement or compromise From the mere fact that the Court passed the decree in accordance with the com promise it cannot be inferred that any of those steps preliminary and necessar) to the making of the decree have been taken by the Court (7) If leave 18 given, under a music presentation of a material fact, due either to fraud or culpable and wilful ignorance it is not binding (8)

When necessary -The rule does not only refer to agreements out of Court but to such agreements as also to compromise decrees, namely, those agreements which are given effect to by a decree of the Court The words "any agreement ctc, include a compromise finally determining the suit (9) The provisions apply to compromises after decree (10) Applications in execution are proceedings in the suit, so that a compromise of such a proceeding would be a compromise

"with reference to the sut" (1) A guardian has no power to waive a right to compensation for part of the estate taken under the Land Acquisition Act, (2) nor to enter into an agreement to refer matters in suit to arbitration, (3) though the contrary his also heen held, (4) or to withdraw a suit without the leave of the Court (5). A mere matter of proof, such as the consent hy a guardian of a ninor defendant to accept the oath of the plaintiff (6) or abstaining from pressing objections, it heing uncertain whether there was evidence sufficient to sustain them (7) is not within the rule.

Effect of want of leave.—A decree hy consent without leave is invalid and not binding on the minor (8). The only modes, however, of setting aside a decree are by review under sect 114 or by a separate suit, (9) and not by application for a rule in the original suit, (10) or in execution proceedings under sect 47 the question whether a decree was void as against the minor not heing one relating to the execution of the decree (11). 15. The provisions contained in rules 1 to 14, so far as is Application of rules to they are applicable, shall extend to persons ethothough not so adjudged to be of unsound mind and to persons tho though not so adjudged are found by the Court on inquiry, by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity, to be ineapable of protecting their interests when sump or being suced

Persons of unsound mind or mentally infirm—By sect 163 of the last Code the provisions meets 110 to 162 of that Code were declared mutatis mutandist to apply in the case of persons alpidaged to be lunaries under Act XXXV of 1838 or any other lunary law for the time being in force. It was held that the provisions of act 110 of the last Code were by that section to be applied to lunaries. Whatever might be the meaning of the word 'guardian in sect 440, when amors were concerned, it was held that there was no reason to suppose that the La-slature intended to after or affect the existing law in respect of the persons who alone in entitled to bring suits on behalf of the estate of a lunario. The person denominated guardian must mean the person who is himself competent to sue. A guardian of the person only of a lunario has no right to bring a suit in respect of the lunarial sestate. The manager of the estate is the person to do so though under sect. 410 a person other than the guardian of the estate could ilso size with the few of the Court (1).

Sect 163 of the last Code applied in terms only to those adjudged to be of unsound mind and therefore in other cases of unsoundness of mind a next friend or guardian could not be appointed under Chapter XXXI (2). The provisions however of that Chapter were held not to be exhaustive and the Courts to have an inherent power to act in the interests of justice. Though a person alleged to be a lunatic though not so found might appear either in person or through a vakil, (3) if it was held that a person of unsound mind was not entitled to sue by a next friend or defend by a guardian until he had been adjudged to be a lunatic, serious failure of justice might result (1). Where therefore, a person was admitted or was found to be of unsound mind, although he had not been adjudged to be so, he should, it was held, if a plaintiff, be allowed to sue through his next friend, and the Court should appoint a guardan ad liters where he was a defendant (1). It had to be first ascertained whether the person in question was or was not of unsound mind, and in the case of a suit instituted by a next friend whether the suit was for his benefit (2). It will be observed that the amended rule gives effect to these rulings, and the preceding rules are made directly applicable both to adjudged and non adjudged lunatics. The rule also includes the mentally infirm so as to cover the case of a person incapacitated from protecting his interests by reason of his mintal weakness or of his being a deaf mute.

16. ORDER XXXIII

Suits by Paupers

Subject to the following provisions, any suits may be t instituted by a pauper. Suits may be instituted ın formâ pauperis Explanation .- A person is a "pauper" when he is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint in such suit, or, where no such fee is prescribed, when he is not entitled to property worth one hundred supees other than his necessary wearingapparel and the subject matter of the suit.

"Suit" "Instituted "-It was held that the wording of this and the following rules indicate that the only I and of application contemplated by the Legislature is an application to institute a snit (1) The word 'instituted" has now been substituted for "brought It was however held in the case last cited that a Court had power to allow a suit instituted in the ordinary form to be continued in forma pauperis (2) It has been held that an order to an e security for costs obtained in a suit filed in the ordinary course ceases to operate as regards intecedent costs if leave is given to continue the suit as pauper provided the lowe is granted before the time for giving security has expired (3) Although the provisions in the Code only provide for suits to be brought by a pauper, it has been held that the Court has power to allow a defendant to defend in forma pauperts (1) Order XLIV post provides for pauper appeals and as to cross appeals in forma pauperts see notes to that order Sect 111 provides for the procedure in miscellaneous proceedings and the provisions of Chapter XXVI of the last Code, which these rules replace have been held applicable to petitions for Probate (5) and to suits sanctioned for removal of trustees under the Religious Endowments 1ct (6)

"Pauper'-The only question is whether an applicant is a pauper as defined in the Explanation A person is not bound to try and raise funds by

In either ease the effect of pauperism is the same the first case the measure is the sum required to pay the fee on the plaint. In The intention in both cases is the same the second case Rs 100 is the measing viz to fix a certain sum-in one case the fee on the planet, and in the other case Rs 100, and to provide that if the petitioner has not this sum at his disposal he will be exempt from court fees (11) So, property admitted to be the propert) of the petitioner is not the "subject matter of the suit," although claimed in the potition (12) The concluding portion of the Explanation, "other than he necessary wearing apparel," etc., do not govern its flist part (13)

Formerly excepted suits -Uuder sect 402 of the last Code a pauper could not sue to recover compensation for loss of easte, libel, slander, abusine language or assault The suits excepted were strictly limited to those men tioned Where it was argued that Chapter XXVI of the former Code nas intended to apply only to suits for the enforcement of personal claims and therefore not to suits under the Religious Endowments Δct or sect 539 (now 92, 93) of the Code, it was held, that in that Chapter and particularly in sect 402 and the former section corresponding with r 5, the restrictions on the liberty of the right to sue as a pauper were expressly prescribed and that the Court would be adding to those restrictions if it held that a person should not be allowed to sue as a pauper when his suit is one that is brought under the Δct mentioned (1). There are, however, now no excepted suits as sect 402 of the last Code has not been re-enacted. The Special Committee stated that in the light of the case law it was musleading, so far as it suggested that a suit would be for loss of caste or abusive language, and they saw no sufficient reason for withholding from a painer a right to sue as such in respect of defamation or assault.

Presentation of application —Where an applicant dies before leave is granted the legal representative may present a fresh application or may institute a suit for the same relief which the deceased sought to recover if the right to sue survives in him (2)—R—3 is imperative and a petition to sue as a pauper must be presented in person unless the pauper is exempted from appearing in Court under sects 133–133 and (3)—So where a petitionic was in jail and did not present the petition in person it was rejected, (4) and the mere fact that several persons jointly present an application does not authorize the Court to entertain it on behalf of applicants who do not appear in person (5)—A leader may be in authorized agent, (6) but in that case he must be specially authorized

Examination of applicant —It was held under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, that the examination referred to is that of the petitioner of his or her agent, and that at this stage the Court has no power to examine witnesses (2). The present rule also speaks inerely of the examination of the petitioner or his agent. If on the examination some of the grounds appear which are mentioned in the next rule then notices are to issue as provided in 1.6, and they pave the way to the formal hearing mentioned in 1.7, at which the question of the applicant's pauperium his is to be determined. The proceedings under this (3) and the next rule are of a preliminary character, and a rejection under them is not as in the case of 1.7, of a final kind and a bar to a subsequent application (4).

The rule directs the examination of an applicant regarding the merits in order that it may be ascertained whether his allegations show or do not show a right to sue (5). The mere statements in the plaint cannot be accepted as the sole material on which a decision as to this question and object, for if this were so, the granting of an application would depend not on whether the pauper had in fact any merits to go upon but on the skill of the person drafting his petition and plaint, and the examination as to the merits under this section would be

Rejection or application —The provisions of this rule, operating as they do in derogation of the ordinary rights of a litigant, must be construed strictly, and the exercise of the Court's power to reject under this rule is limited to the grounds specified in the various chapses of the rule itself (1)

There are conflicting decisions as to whether an appeal does (2) or does not (3) he from an order rejecting an application to sue as n pumper. It has, however, been held in several cases (4) that such an order is subject to rovision.

is to limitation in the case of pauper applications, see below (5)

Clause (d) in the last Code ran, "that his allegations do not show a right to suo in such Court." The concluding words, "sue in such Court," lent some support to the argument that the paragraph referred to the jurisdiction of the Court, and not to the cause of action disclosed in the application (6). It was, however, held that the words "show a right to sue cannot be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether "the right to sue aross within its jurisdiction, but have a more extended meaning, namely, that an applicant must make out that he has a good subsisting cause of action capable of enforcement in Court, and calling for an answer and not barred by the law of imutation or any other law (7). This is now made clear in the amended clause

Examine — The examination must be conducted by the Judge in person (1) as appears from the second paragraph, and was previously held (2) the examination is not limited to the question of painperism, but embraces all the matters referred to in r 5, anke (3). This paragraph enables the parties to argue the question if they so desire but does not preclude the Court if no argument is officied from considering that question (4). If a now defendant be added an inquiry must be made in the presence of uch new defendant (a). notes to next rule. The Crewn has a right to receive fees at the institution of every suit. It temporarily foregoes (r 8) its right in the case of pauper plamtiffs, and thus places means in their hands to proceed to judgment against their defendants. Without the ferhearance of Government to insist on its ordinary rule, the suit in such a case could not have been brought or the money realized. It is therefore reasonable that the Crown, in consideration of its giving up its rights to these fees, should have for their defrayal the first claim on the proceeds of the pauper suit (1) The order should not be a contingent one (2) The amount of court-fees is a first charge (3) on the subject-matter (4) To enforce it the Government need not bring a separate suit, but can realize the court fee from the property by proceedings in execution (5) The rule is enabling, and though it indicates the manner in which the Crown may proceed to realize the debt, it does not preclude the Crown or its representatives from urging its prerogative and insisting on its rights to precedence over all their creditors (6) The period allowed to Government is the ordinary period allowed for execution to an individual under the Limitation Act (7) The section provides that persons who have been successful as paupers shall, so far as the subjectmatter of their success is concerned, be hable to satisfy, out of what they recover, the amount of the fees which have been for a time, pending the decision of their suit, remitted to them. But the Collector cannot sell the decree, that is, the whole of the plaintiff's right in the decree, which he has got without waiting for the recovery by the plaintiff of that for which he has got his decree (8) An order under this rule for sale of property for the purpose of realizing court fees, and a sale under such order, are ultra tires and a nullity when, in fact, there was ne jurisdiction in the Court to make the order (9) In addition to their being a first charge, they are also recoverable from any party ordered to pay If the pauper succeeds, the fees payable to Government are, under this rule, recoverable from the defendant (10) A defendant should not, however, be made hable to

on for hearing the Court shall order the plaintiff, or any person added as a co-plaintiff to the suit, to pay the court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pruper

Failure of suit -There has been some conflict as to the meaning of the word 'fuls" It has been held that r 10 only applies where there has been a contest, or else an admission of the claim which has avoided a contest, and refers to cases of adjudicated success, and that, similarly, this rule opplies only to cases of adjudicated failure, and to the other cases specified, as where the plaintiff has been dispaupered or the suit has been dismissed under O IX ir 2, 3 ante (4) It was held, therefore, not to apply where the parties came to in annicable arrangement under which the suit was to be dismissed (5) And where an appeal in forma pauperis was withdrawn it was held that no order could be made either under this rule or r 9, and that it was not open to the Court to order the respondents to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties (6) The last decision but one has, however, been dissented from by the Madras High Court, which has held that the words "succeeds" in the last rule and "fails" in this, refer to the ultimate decision or the result of the sint, and not to the mode in which the decision is arrived at, that it would be doing violence to the language of the section to introduce the words " after contest and that a pauper plaintiff is liable to pay the stamp duty if his suit is dismissed without trial (7) A Pull Bench of the Bombay High Court has more recently held that where there is a withdrawal as the result of a compromise, the plantiff does not succeed within the meaning of the last rule, but "fals" within the meaning of this (1). The section has now been amended to include a withdrawal

The terms of this rule are mandatory, and it is obligatory upon the Court when it passes its decrea to provide in that decree for payment by the plaintiff of the court fees (2). The decisions, however, are conflicting upon the question whether where the Court omits to make an order, the Government may,(3) or may not,(4) apply to rectify the decree. It is now declares the right of Government to apply. An order under this rule amounts to a decree in favour of Government against the unsuccessful plaintiff for the amount of the court fees, and can he executed by attachment and sale of any property he possesses (5). This and the last rule only deal with the fees payable to Government. Costs, that is costs of parties inter se against a pauper plaintiff, might, it was held, be awarded to a successful defendant under Chapter XVIII of the former Code (6).

Where a suit is instituted by a next friend on behalf of a minor, the latter is the plaintiff. It frequently is right to make a guardian or noxt friend liable for costs, but there are also cases in which it is not proper to do so. And it does not necessarily follow that because the suit is unsuccessful, the next friend is, as

n matter of course, to be ordered personally to pay the costs (7)

The origin of the last penal clause of sect 142 of the last Code is to be found in sect 53, Reg IV of 1827 known as Elphinstones Code where however, it is made applicable to all plaintiffs alike. It was omitted from the Code of 1859 but re enacted in that section with respect to pauper plaintiffs not for the purpose of exempting them from paying costs to a successful defendant but because it was deemed necessary to provide a special protection to defondants against being harassed by persons who exhapothesis are not likely to be influenced by the fear of having to pay costs (8). It has now been altogether omitted

12 The Government shall have the right at any time to apply

Government may apply to the Court to make an order for the payment for supplied from for the fourt fees under rule 10 or rule 11

An order refusing to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue; but the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs (if any) incurred by the Government and by the opposite party in opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper.

Bar to subsequent application —There must be a "refusal" Therefore the rule does not apply where the Court has not passed such an order, as, for instance, if it returns the application to have the question of pauperism tried by a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, (1) or strikes off "for the present" the application for default by non appearance. Under such circumstances the application may be renewed (2) The provisions, morcover, of this rule do not affect the right of a person against whom an order of refusal has been made to obtain a review, and an order under r. 7, refusing leave to sue as a pauper, is subject to review under sect. 114 (3) Assuming however that there is an order which is final, the bar under this rule being one to jurisdiction, a Court is competent and bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit (4)

On the rejection of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the only course open to the applicant is that declared in this rule, and to institute a suit in the ordinary way, and the date of the institution of that suit for the

Iliter, when leave to sue as a pauper having been granted, the applicant is dispaupered (2). The rule does not expres ly provide for the case of withdrawal by the petitioner of his applica tion for leave and payment by him of the court fees. It has, however, been held by the Cilcutta High Court, (3) dissenting from the opinion of the Allahabad High Court (4) that if an application for leave to sue as a pauper is made, and, upon the defendant opposing it, the applicant puts in the proper court fee and asks the Court to treat his application as a plaint, the application should be decined for the purpose of limitation to be a plaint presented on the date on which it was filed

Costs incurred.- Although this rule makes it a condition precedent in the institution of an ordinary suit by a person whose application to sue in forma paupers has been rejected that he should first pay the costs incurred by Govern ment the suit ought not to be dismissed for default in payment of such costs when no demand for the payment has been made either on behalf of the Govern ment or by the Court (5)

ORDER XXXIV.

Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoreable Property

1 Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having parties to suits for an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage

Explanation —A pursue mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit, and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage

Mortgage suits -This Order is taken (with the exception of rr 9 and 11 which are new) from sects 85-90, 92-94, 96, 97 of the Transfci of Property Act (IV of 1882) R 14 is a provision analogous to sect 100 of that Act both dealing with charges Certain amendments, chiefly by way of addition, have been made, to which notice will be drawn The object of the introduction of this Order was stated to be that hitherto some confusion had been occasioned by the co existence of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Code in regard to execution in mortgage suits The incorporation of this Order in the Code would, it was said be welcomed by every one who is familiar with the almost endless controversies which have gathered round the applicability of the provisions of the Code to the enforcement of decrees for sale under the Ir insfer of Property Act It was considered that the provisions relating to execution in mortgage suits-that is, questions of procedure-should be dealt with in their entircty in the Code, and this Order has been introduced to give effect to this view As a consequence of this the sections above mentioned of the Fransfer of Property Act as also sect 99 (as to which see r 11) and a portion of sect 100 of that Act, have been repealed by the fifth schedule The general effect of this order, therefore is that the ordinary provisions of the Code apply to mortgage suits and the execution of mortgage decrees unless there be some special exception to the contrary It has been said that the effect of the in c reporation of these sections of the Transfer of Property Act is that the Original Si le of the Calcutta High Court should discard any independent practice by ed on the old procedure (1) The subject of this Order has already been fully de ilt

with hy Di Rash Behary Ghose in his work on mortgages and hy Mr H S Gour in his Law of Transfer in British India It is not necessary, therefore, to go over the same ground We therefore content ourselves with noting the amendments and additions effected by the present Code

R 1 is taken from seet 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, but after the word "interest substitutes in heu of the words "in the property comprised in a mortgage, '(1) the words "citler in the mortgage security or in the right of The former phrase 'Having an interest in the property, etc., has been the subject of numerous cases, which will be found collected in Mr Gour's work. It was proposed to add at the end of the first paragraph of the rule the words 'and the decree shall not bind any person not so joined ' Seet 85 of the Act contained the proviso following ' Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest It was pointed out that this proviso had given rise to certain doubts which it was sought to remove by substituting for it the words cited with a view to making it clear (2) that a person not a party is not hound by a decree It has been recently held that a mortgageo who is made a defendant and who omits to set up a mortgage is harred from swing on such mortgage where in consequence of lus emission the property is ordered to be sold free from the mortgage which had not been pleaded (3) As regards the former provise it was said (4) that the provise subordinating the obligation to join to notics was unnecessary and misleading For, in the absence of any discriminating equity affecting the right of excluded interests it was not clear what object the provise was intended to serve Could it be supposed that if the plaintiff had omitted to join a necessary party because he had no notice of his interest, then his interest would be differently affected to what they would ho if he was excluded even though the plaintiff did have notice of his interest? Notice may sometimes affect the question but it does not always do so The proviso has now been comitted but the proposed addition has not (probably as being unnecessary) been made. It has been held that a son in a Mitakshara joint family is a person having an interest in the mortgage and is a necessary party (5) But in a suit for sale on a mortgage where the defendant-mortgagois were the managing members of a Mitakshara joint family who in that capacity had purchased the mortgaged property it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the family was sufficiently represented by them and that the suit would not fail through non joinder of the other members (6) The Calcutt High Court has recently dissented from this holding that under this rule a mortgage suit brought by the Large of a joint family without making the other members of the family parties is not maintainable (7). It has also been held that the effect of an intentional non joinder of a subsequent mortgagee in a suit on a prior mortgage would not be the dismissal of the suit but only of so much of it as relates to property affected by the subsequent mortgage (1)

Even if the non joinder as a party defendant who ought to have been made a party to a suit for sale on a mortgage is by itself a defect fatal to the suit. such defect is cured if the Court acting under O I r 10, sub rule (2), adds such person as a defendant (2)

The Explanation to r 1 is new There were a number of decisions on the question whether a prior mortgagee was a necessary party in a suit to enforce a subsequent mortgage, a question the determination of which depended upon the meaning to he attached to the word "property" in sect 85 Was all that was involved in the puisne mortgagee's suit the equity of redemption, in which case the prior mortgagee not being interested therein need not be joined, or was the interest involved something more than the equity? in other words, the mortgaged property subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee, in which ease the latter was a necessary party This question has now been settled by the exclusion of the amhiguous word "property" in the body of the rule and the addition of the Explanation which removes the doubts which have arisen from the conflict of authorities on the point

In r 2 (c) the words " of so required " have been added before "retransfer" The special Committee stating that according to Mofusil practice a retransfer was not ordinarily required, and heing of opinion that this practice should not he altered It has been held that a Court passing a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit under this rule has no power to award interest at other than the contractual rate up to the time fixed for payment unless for some legal reason

The same Committee as regards r 3 omitted a proposed provision as to the defendant prying money to the plaintiff, considering it better that in every case be should pay into Court Clauses (a) and (b) of the same rule are new, as are also the similar clauses in rr 5 and 8 R 5 (2) deals with an application by the plaintiff only The concluding words of sect 89, "and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished,' have been omitted

Clause (3) of r 8 appears to he an addition The question which may be raised in connection with this rule, whether one suit for redemption has the effect of barring a second suit for the same rulef, has already been dealt with See notes to sect 9, O II r 2 sects 11-14, and Index

R 9 is new. It is a recognition of existing practice and remedies and is an obvious omission in the Transfer of Property Act

So also is r 11, which has been inserted in compliance with the suggestion of the Privy Council (1) This rule was in the Iransfer of Property Bill, but

Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time time postpone the day fixed for such payment

(3) On the passing of a decree under sub rule (2) the debt secured by the mortgage shall be deemed to be Discharge of debt.

Clauses (a) and (b), sub rule (1) - See notes to r 1 ante The liansfer of Property Act did not contain any provision for the passing of a final decree in cases where payment was made in accordance with the terms of the picluminary decree This was an omission which has been supplied in the first clause of this rule, and of ir 5 and 8, post These provide for the passing of final decrees in such cases (!) Nothing in sub rule (1) shall apply to any territories to which the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, has not been extended.

It has been said that this rule has merely effected a change of procedure in the manner in which mortgaged property must be realized in execution of money decrees (1)

Sunt for sale—The Code repeals seet 99 of the Transfer of Property Let In its place this rule has been enacted. The first part of that section provided that a mortgagee should not bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a sunt under sect 67 of that Act. In so far as it procluded the mortgage from a llingthe mortgaged property under a judgment unconnected with the mortgage debt, it has been considered inextedior. tion from the mortgagor by an agreement subsequent to, and distinct from, the mortgage transaction There was no reason, therefore, why it should not be equally competent to him to have it sold in satisfaction of any claim which he might have against the mortgagor unconnected with the mortgage (1) This has accordingly been enacted Sect 99 spoke of "any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not" The present rule is limited to claims arising under the mortgage To this extent only the former provisions are retained. The Select Committee were also at one time of the opinion that seet 99, in so far as it precluded the mortgagee from selling the property under a judgment for the mortgage deht, served no useful purpose As to this they wrote understand that the provision was enacted to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the deht as such, and in execution selling the mortgagor's interest in the property, we, however, think that no such provision was needed. seeing that under the law, as it stood prior to the Act, the Courts never allowed the sale of a hare equity of redemption under a judgment on the covenant" (2) It was, however subsequently considered that as the mortgagor would be deprived of the henefit of the period of redemption given him by a mortgage decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, unless the former provisions were maintained in respect of claims arising under the mortgage, the former restrictions should to this extent be retained in those territories to which that Act applied Where a usufructuary mortgaged who had not obtained possession brought a suit for possession and this was compromised and by consent a simple money decree was passed in his favour it was held that the decree being one passed on a compromise, he was not precluded from bringing the mortgaged property to sale in execution of it (3) Where usufructuary mort gagees obtained a decree for possession and costs and then in execution of the decree for costs applied for attachment of part of the property, it was held that this application was not barred by this rule (4) In a recent case where mortgagees stating that they had relinquished their claim under the mortgage, obtained a simple money decree, and when this was not satisfied proceeded to put their mortgage into Court and prayed for a decree for sale on it it was held that the former proceedings were not a bar to this suit (a)

All the provisions contained in this Order as to the sale or redemption of mortgaged property shall, so far as may be, apply to property subject to a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Interpleader—Prior to the Euglish Judicature Acts, the right of interpleader at Common Law thildered from that in Equity Common Law unterpleader but (1.6.2 Will 4 c.58) and the C. L.P. Act of 1860 (2). The language of sects 470 and 471 of the last Code was almost identical with that of the first mentioned statute, and the Euglish rulings, so far as the two enactimats are the same applied (3). The Euglish Acts with the exception of sect. 17 of the C. L.P. Act. 1860 are now repealed, and the right of interpleader and practice in interpleader proceedings are regulated in England evaluatively by O. 57. him does not apply where the title of the landlord to grant the lease is not dis puted, but it is alleged by such other person that the landlord only acted as trustee in granting such lease (1) In execution of a decree against B, the halliff 1 seized certain goods, which were released on C paying under protest the sum mentioned in the warrant A paid the money into the office Held, that C sremedy was not by interpleading but suing for money had and received (2) An interpleader suit is not improperly constituted merely because one of the defendants does not claim the whole of the subject matter (3) An applicant may apply for relief before an action is commenced against him. In the case cited, (4) the plaintiffs sued, and were held to have properly sued, for an injunction restraining the defendants from suing them The former section spoke of a person whose only interest was that of a stakeholder. The phrase has been altered but the meaning remains the same R 3 provides for a stay where the stakeholder has been actually sued. In this connection, however, the provise to sect 88 is to be borne in mind R 1 requires that a person constituting an interpleader suit should have no interest otherwise than as a mere stakeholder, that is no interest other than for charges and costs. A lien in respect of freight and charges is allowable (5) And personal relief may be sought by way of an injunction restraining the defendants from suing the plaintiff (6) There must be no collusion This term does not entail anything inorally wrong Where plaintiffs had entered into an agreement with the stakeholders by which they hound themselves to defeat the claim of the other claimants to the fund, it was held that there was collusion within the rule (7) Under r 2, the subject of dispute may be required to be paid into or placed in the custody of the Court In the case cited (8) the plamtiffs had not done so and it was therefore held that their charge for wharfage and demuriage could not be allowed. There is an appeal from orders in interpleader suits under rr 3, 4 6 Sec O XLIII (9) As a general rule, a plaintiff in a properly instituted interpleader suit is entitled to his costs In such case he is entitled to a hen for his costs on the fund, and is not forced to take his chance of getting them from the defendant, against whom the Court decides (10) An interpleader suit with a prayer for declaration of the titles of the several acts of defendants in the disputed land by the tenant against the landlords in whose favour he has executed separate Kabulyats is not maintamable (11) such other form as may be from time to time presented.

(2) In any case m which the plant and summons are in such forms, respectively, the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a Judge as hereinafter provided so to appear and defend, and, in default of his obtaining such leave or of his appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted, and the plaintiff shall he entitled to a deeree for any sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the deeree, and such sum for costs as may be prescribed, unless the plaintiff claims more than such fixed sum, in which ease the costs shall be ascertained in the ordinary way, and such deeree may be executed forthwith.

Scope of rules —In 1885 was passed the English Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act (18 & 19 Vict c 67) Subsequently to the passing of the Code of 1859, the Indian Bills of Exchange Act (V of 1866) was passed The words of the Indian Act were slightly larger than those of the English Act , (1) but in spirit the two Acts were piecisely the same (2) The Code of 1877 con solidated the provisions of the Code of 1859 and of Act V of 1866 from sect 2, of which Act sect 532 in the last Code was taken (3) The intention of the Act was that where there was no pretence for a defence the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but that if the defendant bad a real, though it may not be a good, defence, he should have leave to appear and to set it up (4) The effect of the provision therefore is, that where leave is refused, the plaintiff gets a decico on his allegations merely, unsupported by evidence, on proof of service of summons and on the usual certificate of the Registrar that no leave to defend has been obtained (5) If leave is granted, the suit proceeds as one instituted in the ordinary course, evidence being taken on both sides

"Suits upon bills of exchange," etc -The rule is confined to suits on negotiable instruments (6) and the plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons and obtain by his decree whatever sum, principal, and interest is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable (7) As, however, abeady stated, the plaintiff, when no leave to defend is grauted, gets his decree upon his simple statement in the plaint unsupported by any evidence. It was accordingly formerly held, (8) that it was not the intention of the Legislature that a summons served in the form prescribed by the former section should have the effect of enabling the plaintiff's statement of the fact, in his petition to prevail without evidence The section it was considered, applied only to those simple cases in which the negotiable instrument itself, together with mere lapse of time, was sufficient to establish for the plaintiff a prim i facie right to recover There fore the section was held not to apply where a promissory note was payable by instalments, and contained a stipulation that on default in payment of the first instillment the whole amount was to become due, and a suit was brought to recover the whole amount on default in payment of the first instalment, as in such ease the pluntiff was obliged to allege the occurrence of another fact besides the lapse of time since the making of the bill, viz that the first instalment had not been paid, which fact was necessary according to the terms of the bill in order to complete the plaintiff slight to sue (9) The Explanation to the section of the last Code overruled this decision and declared that a suit on a negotiable instrument was not limited to such cases. Thus, had the ease eited occurred after the enactment of the Explanation, a decree would have been gruted (1). The last mentioned case appeared, however, to throw doubt on the point, and with a view to clear it up the following amendments were succested.—

"The provisions of this rule shall not be deemed to be inapplicable to a suit merely because the cause of action includes facts which, if not admitted by the defendant, would have to be proved by the plaintiff '

Illustrations

(a) A sucs B upon a promissory note bearing an endorsement of payment which has been cancelled. This section is not mapplicable merely because A must prove that the note was endorsed by madeertence, but that payment was not made and the endorsement cancelled in consequence.

(b) A executes, in favour of B, a promissory note for Rs 1,000 payable in two equal instalments on the 1st July and 1st September, respectively with a stipulation that, in default of payment of the first instalment, the whole amount shall become immediately payable. On the 13th July, B sucs A for the whole amount. This section is not inapplicable merely because B must allege and prove that the first instalment was not paid on the 1st July.

As regards, however, the proposed amendment, the Special Committee reported that the explanation to sect 533 of the last Code was inserted to negative the effect of the decision in 1 Cal 130 but its meaning as it stood was obscure. They therefore deleted the explanation and added the words italicized in the body of the rule, "the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted "which will remove the doubts at which the explanation was aimed. Suits under this Order must be brought within six months from the time the instrument sued on becomes due and payable (2)

Summons—The plaint is in the ordinary form but as evidence is not receivable, particular care must be taken to see that all the facts showing how the cause of action arose are stated in the plaint (3). The summons, however either follows the Form in the Schedule, or is in such other form as the High Court may from time to time presente (See notes to next rule). After the usual return of service and the expiration of the period mentioned in the summons an order of Court for a decree should be obtained (4). Quarre—whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension be made hefore the time fixed by the summons has expired. But the Court has no power, after the time fixed by the summons for obtaining leave to appear and defend has expired, to extend the time (5). But see now seet 148 and notes to next rule. The plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons whatever sum, principal, or interest is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable, though as to interest beyond the scope of the instrument the question is a different one, and out of the scope of the Act (1). The rule, however, says that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a sum not exceeding that mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any). Where a suit has been instituted under these provisions, which was held to be not maintain able under them, a fresh summons under the ordinary procedure may be ordered (2) fixed by the summons itself as the time within which the defendant might apply for leave. But where the time fixed by the summons itself is ten days, though it has been a question of doubt whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension be mide before the time fixed by the summons has expired, the Court has no power, after the time fixed by the summons for obtaining leave to appear and defend his expired, to extend the time (1) But see now notes to last rule. It has been held that in an application for leave to appear and defend, the defendant cannot go into the question whether the summons was served on the date shown by the sheriff's return or not at all (2).

not at all (2) When there is no pretence for a defence the party sned should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but if the defendant has a real (it is not necessary to say a good) defence, he should have leave to appear and set it up. As eases, however, sometimes occur where an apparently real defence is shown, but its sincerity is doubtful, there the defendant is let in to defend, only on the terms of his bringing the money into Court (3) It was held under the English Act that it was not necessary that there should be a defence on the merits, and that if the defendant appears and discloses any defence, legal or equitable, he will be allowed to appear and defend (1) In a summary suit, if a defendant has been arrested before judgment and claims compensation under sect 95, he is entitled to apply for leave to defend, and if n prima facie case is made out, leave should be given (5) Where there is n reason to doubt the bone fides of the defence, the condition of paying the money into Court, or giving security, will be imposed (6) In giving leave to defend, the Court has a discretion to order security for costs, not only where there is a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence, but also where it appears unnecessary, though allowable (7) If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, he will be allowed to apply to have the leave resemded (8) Where n conditional order is passed, but the condition is not performed, the order is a nullity, and subsequent steps to set it aside are unnecessary (9)

4. After deeree the Court may, under special erreum-is may to set aside stances, set aside the deeree, and if necessary stay or set aside execution, and may give leave to the defendant to appear to the summons and to defend the suit, if it seems reasonable to the Court so to do, and on such terms as the Court thinks fit principal, or interest is, ou the legal construction of the instrument, demandable, though as to interest beyond the scope of the instrument the question is a different one, and out of the scope of the Act (1). The rule, however, says that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a sum not exceeding that mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any). Where a suit has been instituted under these provisions, which was held to be not maintain able under them, a fresh summons under the ordinary procedure may be ordered (2).

Decree —In a suit against the drawer, acceptor, and indorser, a decree containing a condition exempting the indorser from liability until the plaintiff has exhausted his remedies against the drawer and acceptor is illegal (3)

3 (1) The Court shall, upon application by the defendant, person ments to have leave to appear and to defend the suit, upon affidavits which disclose such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to sufficient to support the application.

(2) Leave to defend may be given unconditionally or subject to such terms as to payment into Court, giving security, framing and recording issues or otherwise as the Court thinks fit.

Leave to defend —Applications for leave to appear and to defend a suit must, according to the Limitation Act, be made within ten days from the date when the summons was served (4) It has been held, however, that the Court on granting leave to issue a plaint under these provisions, may fix a reasonable time, having regard to the residence of the defendant, within which the latter may apply for leave to defend, and that the ten days prescribed by the Form was not an unalterable limit (5) In the last cited case twenty eight days was fixed by the summons itself as the time within which the defendant might apply for leave. But where the time fixed by the summons itself is ten days, though it has been a question of doubt whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension he made before the time fixed by the summons has expired, the Court has no power, after the time fixed by the summons for obtaining leave to appear and defend has expired, to extend the time (1). But see now notes to last rule. It has been held that in an application for leave to appear and defend, the defendant cannot go into the question whether the summons was served on the date shown by the sheriff's return or not at all (2).

When there is no pretence for a defence the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but if the defendant has a real (it is not necessary to say a good) defence, he should have leave to appear and set it up As cases, however, sometimes occur where an apparently real defence is shown, but its sincerity is doubtful, there the defendant is let in to defend, only on the terms of his bringing the money into Court (3) It was held under the English Act that it was not necessary that there should he a defence on the merits, and that if the defendant appears and discloses any defence, legal or equitable, he will be allowed to appear and defend (4) In a summary suit, if a defendant has been arrested before judgment and claims compensation under sect 95, he is entitled to apply for leave to defend, and if a prima facie case is made out, leave should be given (5) Where there is a reason to doubt the bona fides of the defence, the condition of paying the money into Court, or giving security, will be imposed (6) In giving leave to defend, the Court has a discretion to order security for costs, not only where there is a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence, but also where it appears unnecessary, though allowable (7) If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, he will be allowed to apply to have the leave rescinded (8) Where a conditional order is passed, but the condition is not performed, the order is a nullity, and subsequent steps to set it aside are unnecessary (9)

4. After decree the Court may, under special erreum- is because to set aside stances, set aside the decree, and if necessary decree. stay or set aside exceution, and may give leave to the defendant to appear to the summons and to defend the suit, if it seems reasonable to the Court so to do, and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

"Special circumstances"—The Court will determine in each ease what these are. The point is, is it reasonable that the deerce should be set aside? Under this rule, though a defendant has not come in within the time required, yet he may appear and make his defence on the decree against him being set aside (1) The question as to what took place upon the occasion of the service of summons by the Sheriff is one which may properly be taken into consideration on an application under this section to set aside the decree (2) But irregular service of summons on two out of three defendants to an action brought on a joint promissory note, does not give the defendant properly served any ground to question the decree passed against him (3)

treest before sudament

Where at any stage of a suit, other than a suit of the is 1 nature referred to in section 16, clauses (a) Where defendant may be called upon to furnish to (d), the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or security for appearance otherwise .-

(a) that the defendant, with intent to delay the plaintiff, or to avoid any process of the Court or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,-

(1) has absconded or left the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(11) is about to abscond or leave the local limits of the nurisdiction of the Court, or

(111) has disposed of or removed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court bis property or any part thereof, or

(b) that the defendant is about to leave British India under circumstances affording reasonable probability that the plaintiff will or may thereby be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be passed against the defendant in the suit.

the Court may issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and hring [s him before the Court to show cause why he should not furnish security for his appearance

Provided that the defendant shall not be arrested if he pays to the officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant any sum specified in the narrant as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, and such sum shall be held in deposit by the Court until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court

(1) Where the defendant fails to show such cause the (s 4 Court shall order him either to deposit in Court Security money or other property sufficient to answer the claim against him, or to furnish security for his appearance at any time when called upon while the suit is pending and until satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him in the suit, or make such order as it thinks fit in regard to the sum which may have been paid by the defendant under the proviso to the last preceding rule.

(2) Every surety for the appearance of a defendant shall bind himself, in default of such appearance, to pay any sum of money which the defendant may be ordered to pay in the suit

Application for security -These rules amalgamate sects 477, 478, 179 of the last Code The object of the process in this and the following rules is to have some security for the execution of the decree when it is passed, and that the person of the defendant will be within reach at that time however, not entitled, merely because he has a just demand against his debtor, to arrest him before judgment, (1) nor can a debtor he arrested simply to secure easy execution of the decree should one be obtained (2) The procedure is only intended to secure to a creditor his rights when it is shown that a dehtor with one or other of the intentions (3) mentioned in r 1, has done or is about to do the acts montioned in clauses (1), (11), (111), or is about to leave British India (4) under the circumstances stated And if a creditor procures the arrest of his dehtor without reasonable or probable cause, he renders himself liable to a suit for damages or to summary proceedings under sect 95 It is not the principles governing the English writ ne excat regno which govern the matter, but the words of the Code (5)

Warrant -For a form of warrant of arrest hefore judgment, see First Schedule, Appendix F , No I

Order to give security .- In showing cause it may he shown that the suit is not a bona fide one, that the defendant has not done or is not about to do the acts charged in clauses (i), (ii), (iii) of r 1, or that he is not about to leave India, or that, if he is about to leave, none of the circumstances mentioned exist, or that even if the suit is bona fide the institution of it has been vexatiously delayed till the defendant is about to depart from India in order to embarrass or coerce him (6) It has been held that the word "claim" in sect 479 of the last Code meant the amount of money claimed, and that the security required to be given by a defendant who is arrested before judgment did not include security for costs (7)

Failure to give security -It is of course only in the event of a defendant neither furnishing security nor offering a sufficient deposit that he can be committed to custody (1) When committed the Court can secure the defendant's appearance by a warrant to the jailor (2) The defendant is to be committed until the suit is decided or where a decree is passed against him until the decree has been executed The words in the former Code were "until execution of the decree ' These last words were somewhat obscure It was and that they could not mean until steps were taken to execute the decree as such a construction would put an immense power of oppression into the hands of the judgment creditor. It was held therefore that execution meant contlete executionthat is until possession was given to the plaintiff of what was ordered by the An arrest therefore under this section became after decree an irrest until the decree was satisfied or wholly executed. It therefore became subject to the limitation 18 to time imposed by sect 312 (now 58), which forbade extension of such arrest beyond the period of six months (3). The application -The jurisdiction given to Civil Courts to attach before judgment should be exercised with great discretion, and no Court should grant such an attachment on light grounds or unless it is perfectly satisfied by trust worthy evidence that the defendant is about to dispose of his property or to remove it from the jurisdiction of the Court (3) In all applications for attach ment before judgment, there must be uberrima fides on the part of the plaintiff, and where the most perfect good faith is wanting the application should be rejected (4) The application can be made at any stage of the suit, but can be entertained only so long as the suit is pending (5) The facts mentioned in clauses (o) and (b) must bave been done with the intent mentioned in the first paragraph, namely, to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree which might be passed (6) Clause (a) says, is "about to dispose of etc., therefore the section does not apply where the defendant has actually parted with the property (7) The section does not refer exclusively to moveable property but applies to immoveable property also (8) Where it was contended that the words in sect 484 of the last Code, " produce and place at the disposal of the Court ' show that moveable property only can be attached it was held that the term "property" as used in the section, was wide enough to include property of every description inoveable and immoveable, whether in the actual possession of the defendant or of some other person on his behalf and the words mentioned only referred to such property as is capable of being produced in Court (9) Attachment of property covers its profits (10) \ Small Cause Court cannot, however attach immoveable property (11) Where the property is the property in suit, an injunction should be obtained under O XXXIX r 1 clause (o) which may be enforced under r 2 of that order by imprisonment or attachment And where the property is not that in suit, an alternative remedy is given under r 1 of the same order clause (b) where the word 'property' is not confined to property within the jurisdiction or to property which is in disjute in the suit (12) This rule has no application in divorce proceedings (13)

Property without the jurisdiction.—It was held under the last Code both that the section did not (1) and did (2) apply where the property sought to be attached was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was pending. A Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in antiopation of it. It was therefore held, under the Code of 1859, that a Court of Small Causes could not attach immoveable property under this section (3). This is the law now. It was held that the Court had jurisdiction where the property was a chose in action due from the Collector who, like the judgment-debtor, resided within the jurisdiction of the attaching Court (4).

Effect of attachment -See notes to next rule

Call for security —For form of order calling for security, see Sched I, App F, No 5 As to whether property beyond the jurisdiction can be attached under this rule, see last paragraph but one Cause can be shown after security has been furnished to avoid attachment (5) Sect 145 ante, applies to sureties under this rule (6) An order under sect 483 of the last Code was not one of those in respect of which an appeal was given under sect 588 of that Code, (7) though an appeal lay from au order of attachment under the following section An appeal lies under the present section (see O XLIII r 1 (q)) The words "produce and place at the disposal of the Court" refer only to such property as is capable of being produced in Court (8)

"Conditional attachment"—"Conditional attachment" might mean an attachment to be made conditionally on the security not being furnished or cause shown by the prescribed day, or it night mean an immediate attachment of a provisional kind conditioned to become plenary if security should not be furnished or cause shown according to the terms of the order—The form shows that the latter was the intention of the Legislature (9) property specified, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, he attached.

(2) Where the defendant shows such cause or furnishes the required security, and the property specified or any portion of it has heen attached, the Court shall order the attachment to he withdrawn, or make such other order as it thinks fit.

Order of attachment.—This rule corresponds with seet Si of the Code of 1859 It is only on the defendant's failure to show cause or furnish security that attachment can be made. So the latter cannot be ordered unless security has first been demanded,(1) and on one or other of the grounds stated in r. 5, ante (2) As to the form of an order under this section, see Sched I, App F, No 7 An appeal lies from it (3)

Effect of attachment.-The property in the goods attached is in nowise altered by the attachment, but remains as before in the defendant. The Court, as it were, locks up the goods, so that they cannot be disposed of or carried away in any mode that would delay or defeat the execution of the decree if ohtamed.(4) There is nothing in the Code which makes an attaching creditor a secured creditor, or creates any charge or hen in his favour over the property attached The order does not purport to deal with any question of title other words, attachment prevents alienation, it does not confer title making of an order of attachment only operates so as to give the judgmentereditor certain rights in execution (5) It has always been held that an attachment before judgment conferred on the plaintiff no right prior to that of the Official Assignee (6) And it makes no difference whether the vesting order is before or after deerce, for it cannot be contended that a decree qua decree simply constitutes the judgment creditor a secured creditor, or gives him any charge or hen over the property of the judgment-debtor (7) Under, however, the Code of 1859, an attachment, previous to the date of the vesting order, in the execution of a decree, conferred on the judgment creditor a right prior to that of the Official Assignee (1). This was so because under that Code the first attaching creditor had priority over other judgment creditors. But no such priority is now allowed. In fact, there is now no question of priority in a matter of this description, for under sect 295 (now 73) all decree holders who have applied for execution of that decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor hefore the realization of assets from him are entitled to rateable distribution (2). As already stated, an attachment creates no hen. Whether the attachment be hefore or after judgment, all creditors are entitled to share rateably, subject to the provisions of sect 73. An attaching creditor has no exclusive claim until a sale at his instance has actually taken place. The amendments of the law of procedure in this country have been hased upon the principle that so far as possible the creditors should be treated pare passu, and that nothing short of actual realization of the deht due should give rights of priority (3)

Save and except in the two classes of cases mentioned in ir 9 and 10, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative. The effect of such an attachment, whether made hefore or after a decree, is the same, provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment takes place. Therefore though there is no distinct provision such as that which is to be found in sect 64, any private alienation of property attached before judgment during the continuance of the attachment is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (4). An attachment does not affect rights of strangers. See r. 10, post. Where an attachment under the former section, issued by a Court at the instance of a third party, prohibited the creditor from recovering and the debtor from paying the debt, it was held that an order on those terms was not an order staying the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect. 15 of the Lamitation Act (5)

Claims to attached property -This rule of responds with act 50 of the Code of 1501(1). The erect dealing with the investigation of claims is O AM ir 55-63, which must therefore be applied to cases of attachment belo e julgment (2). In the last mentioned ease it was said that this section, which presents the manner of investigation is elent as to the result, the Co rt apparents e a cleary that the sections following wet 278 of the last Code had not been applied. But however this may be, if the defendant has ce seed to have any interest in the property, as where excesting order in insolvenes has been made, it is clear that the attachment ought to be raised, for when the law directs the claim to be investigated it init has that if the claim is mide and the attachment, which was intended merely to preserve the defendant a interest from the effect of private alternations, shall come to an end (3). The o ms a n to object to the validity of the attachment on the ground that property a night to be attached is not transferable at the time when the at phration is made for attachment before pullim int does not operate as a bor to the investigation of the objection when an application has been made for execution of the decree made in the suit (1)

10 Attachment before judgment shall not affect the lights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree

Rights of third parties - The attachment does not by this rule (1) affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit. Therefore the rights of rival creditors cannot be affected by it (2) But these rights must now exist prior to the attachment (3) The attachment does not prevent the property being sold in execution of another decree, whether that decree has been obtained before or after the attachment (4) The main object of the attachment before judgment being to prevent the defendant from disposing of or removing his property from the jurisdiction, this rule, it has been said proves that this prevention is not intended merely for the benefit of the attaching creditor, but may enure also to the benefit of other persons (5) Though one person may have secured the goods, another decree holder may apply for the sale of them (6) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court, where the plaintiff had obtained a money-decree against a Mitalshara coparcener, after having obtained attach ment before judgment of certain joint-property, and the debtor had died before execution, it was held on appeal that a subsequent application to execute the ducree had been nightly dismissed, since an attachment before judgment is inciely precautionary and creates no charge, and so could not defeat another co parcener's title by survivorship (7) As to insolvency, see notes to r 6, anic object is to ensure to a plaintiff payment of his decree. Although they do not ensure this in any event, they do so only so far as that is ensured by preventing the defendant making away with property (1) In other words, the attachment does not of necessity ensure the property to the person who attaches it, provided only he eventually gets a decree Tho plaintiff must not only wait until he has obtained a decree, but he is not competent to proceed against the property attached until he has taken the prelmunary steps the law requires for its enforce ment (2) Ho must, in other words, apply for execution just like any other creditor (3) This is now made clear by the addition of the words "upon an application for execution of such decree" When, however, an application for execution is made, by the terms of this rule no application for attachment is necessary, the attachment before judgment enuring and becoming upon and hy virtue of the application for execution an attachment in execution (1) And upon principle it would seem that the date to be assigned to the attachment as an attachment in execution is that on which application for execution is made (5) It has been held that an attachment before judgment cannot be regarded as the inception of an execution, or as hinding the goods in such a manner as to exclude the right of a third party (such as the Official Assignce) accruing after such attachment, but before judgment and warrant for execution (6) matter of a temporary injunction is the protection of legal rights pending litigation. Its object is to prevent future injury, leaving matters as far as possible in statu quo until the suit in all its bearings can be heard and determined (1)

In exercising jurisdiction the Court does not pretend to determine the legal rights, but merely keeps the property in its actual condition until the legal title can be established. It interferes on the assumption that the party who seeks its interference has the legal right which he asserts, but needs the aid of the Court for the protection of the legal right or of the property in question until the legal right can be ascertained. The Court upon an application for a temporary injunction will deal with the injunction upon the evidence hefore it, and will confine itself strictly to the immediate object sought, and as far as possible abstain from prejudging the question in the cause (2). A temporary injunction is thus not decisive upon the merits, whilst a perpetual injunction, height of feets a decree, is conclusive upon all parties in interest

The general rules governing the grant of fellof are (a) the applicant must show a fair prima facie case in support of the right claimed, (3) (b) and an actual or threatened violation of that right, (4) (c) productive of irreparable or at least serious damage (3). So a temporary injunction will not be granted to restrain a wrong which is a mere technical invasion of the plaintiff sights and does not threaten serious injury (6). As has been concisely said the Court will not grant an injunction unless real injury is apprehended (7) (d) The applicant's conduct should be such as not to discrittle him to assistance, it should he fair and honest, and free from acquescence or delay (8). A less degree of acquiescence or delay will har relief on an interlocutory application than at the final hearing. Apart from the fact that delay is calculated to throw doubt upon the reality of the alleged injury, it is not really material unless it has prejudiced the defendant (9). (c) There must be a greater convenience in grant ing their in refusing the injunction (10). Where, however there is a right it cannot, it has been said, be limited by the religious prejudices of ueighbours (1) (f) Lastly, equally efficacious rehef must not be obtainable by any other usual remedy except in case of breach of trust (2). In a recent case it was held that in deciding whether to grant a temporary injunction the Court should consider whether there was a substantial question pending decision as to the rights of the parties, and whether the nature of that question was such that it was proper that an injunction should meanwhile he granted and whether there would be a greater convenience in granting it (3)

With certain exceptions the aforementioned principles apply equally to perpetual as well as to temporary injunctions. These exceptions are that whereas upon an application for a temporary injunction the plaintiff is required merely to show a clear prima face case, in order to obtain a grant of a perpetual injunction, the legal right must have been established as well as the fact of its actual or threatened violation productive of serious damage (4). In the case of alleged acquiescence a stronger case must be made than would be a bar upon an interlocutory application

A mundatory injunction, that is, an order compelling a defendant to restore things to the condition in which they were at the time when the plaintiff's complaint was made may be either temporary or perpetual, and, generally speaking, the principles regulating its grant are those which are applicable to preventive injunctions, temporary or perpetual as the case may be (5). It has, however been doubted by one of the Judges in a recent case in the Bombay High Court whether a mandatory injunction can in strictness be considered as a temporary injunction under this rule (6). Prompt action is essential if a mandatory injunction is the desired remedy (7)

Breach of injunction —As already stated an injunction has operation from the time it is pronounced. With whatever irregularities the proceedings may be affected, or however erroneously the Court may have acted in granting the injunction, it must be obeyed until it is properly dissolved. In order to see whether the operation of an injunction has been interfered with, regard must be had to the terms of the injunction itself. If it has been disobeved. then proceedings in the matter of the contempt will be against those in active disohedience and those who ahet them The High Courts have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing these decrees in personam This turisdiction has not been affected by the Code (1) It has been held that a District Court is not a Court of Record, and as such has no inherent power to commit for contempt (2) However this may be, the Code gives powers which according to the last cited case are only exerciseable when the Court is put in motion by a party who deems himself aggreeved. Suh rule (3) has been remodelled See Bomhay decision, cited (3) The Code, while providing a specific penalty for the breach of an injunction, does not provide that one of the penalties which result from infringement is that any dealing with property the subject of an injunction contrary to its terms is illegal and void. The words of the rule are not to he read as providing for any other penalty than that which is therein specially mentioned (1) Sect 188 of the Penal Code does not opply to an order made by woy of injunction in a civil suit between party and party (5)

As an injunction operates from the date of the order heing made, a party may be committed for the disobedience of an order heinesen the date it is made and the date of its issue, the reason heing that it the rule were otherwise the party against whom the order was made would have all that time during which he might defeat it (6). A pirty, therefore, who has notice of an order, is hound by it from the time it is prenounced, and any incans of information whereby notice is actually received is sufficient it not heing requisite that a defendant should be officially apprised of the injunction or he served with process in order to render him hable for contempt (7)

In order to decide whether there has been an actual breach of the injunction, it is important to observe the objects for which the reliat was granted as well as the circumstances attending it. The violation of the spirit of an injunc it is even though its strict letter may not have been disrigarded, is a breach of the Court's orders (8). On the other hand, when the conduct complained of a literally a breach of the injunction, is not so in spirit, and when the conduction part to violate the order, they will be hid guilt. (4) I have a for a defendant to say that be his acted only read a spans whom in injunction is issued may be to the person who with knowledge of an injunction.

and assists that person to commit a breach of the injunction may hinself be committed for contempt though not for breach of the injunction (1) As regards permanent injunctions, they are decrees, and are enforceable as such (2)

Appeal, Review, Revision—An appeal lies from an order under rr 1, 2, 1 See O XLIII r 1 (r) And it has been held that since an order under 1 Imeans any order passed under r 1, and since under that rule a Court lias the power of refusing an injunction, an appeal lies against an order refusing an injunction (3) It is essential to prove a wrong exercise of discretion (4) But in the under mentioned cases (5) a second appeal was held not to lie It has been held that no appeal hes from an order refusing to grant an injunction without notice (6) A permanent injunction is appealable as a decree (7) The Court may, under sect 114, revise an order, (8) or under sect 114 review (9) Where on an application for the issue of a temporary injunction the Court ordered the defendants to futural security, it was held that this was not an order under r 1 of this rule, and was not appealable under O XLIII 1 (10)

Damage or alienation, waste.—Sometimes an injunction, whether temporary or perpetual, is the instrument by which the Court specifically enfoaces the obligation if arising on contract, or specifically restrains the violation of those other obligations which are the subjects of the law of tort. In other cases a temporary injunction is merely incident or ancillary to the general iclied in this sense that it seeks merely to preserve the status quo, enjoining interference pendente lite by waste, damage or alienation with the subject of litigation or the fraudulent disposition of his property by a party defendant to a suit. Those two rules regulate the grant of temporary injunctions, the latter relating to temporary injunctions against interference with the subject of litigation here spoken of as muunctions sendente lite.
